

Local and Personal

Today was a typical day after one, following a national holiday with business comparatively slow and most people feeling rather out of sorts and having to think twice that today was not Monday. However, the postoffice did a rushing business in handling practically a two days' business because of being closed all day yesterday, and having no carrier deliveries that day.

"Puro Water City" is the modest boast that James H. Owens writes after his name on the register of the Hotel Portland. The slogan could, with perfect propriety, mean Portland itself, but the city referred to by Mr. Owen can be identified, because he is the big lumberman at Medford. That community is especially proud of its brand new water supply, which is piped many miles from the mountains into Medford, and the service is such that it will be adequate when Medford has three times its present population. — The Oregonian.
