"I'm a first-class postmaster in a fourth-class postoffice," claims James Grievie, mayor and Poo Bah of Prospect, on the road to Crater Lake, registered at the Imperial. Prospect was given this name in 1889 when the old-timers thought it was going to have a great future.

Mr. Grievie moved in and established a tavern for wayfarers who were headed for the lake, and for years his eating house was all that comprised the settlement. Later came a filling station and garage and the prospects for Prospect are better now than ever before.

"Ninety per cent of the population of Prospect are in Portland today," observed Mr. Grievie yesterday. "The other two residents could not get away." He has a private deer preserve and catches the animals like a hawk, for he says he doesn't keep Portland hunters killing the deer.—The Oregonian.
