KRAMER TAKES THEME FROM A BUSY STREET

(By Church Reporter) Dr. James W. Kramer was fired with enthusiasm last night when he told his hearers at the First Baptist church of "what he saw at Third and Market streets, San Francisco," as he saw these great people of all colors, race and creed and thought came to him that God was no respecter of person, and that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish but have everlasting life.

"Whosoever," meaning you and I, takes Christ as a guide thru life, surrendering our lives to him have eternal life, to say nothing of the joy and satisfaction that comes to us here on earth as Christians.

Dr. Kramer's subject tonight, "Lonest-to-God-Folks." This subject was given Dr. Kramer by "Dole" Fitzsimmons, the ex-pugilist after his conversion. This subject will be handled in a way that will be of interest to everybody and if you miss this sermon tonight you will miss a great treat. If you want to hear a real gospel preached come out and hear Dr. Kramer every night at 7:30.

Wallace Beery in Craterian Pictures

Lives of 50,000 wanderers torn wide open to starve a smug world. The habits, lives, motives of hobo land are revealed for the public to see in "Beggers of Life," Jim Tully's story of tramp life, pictured by Paramount, which a large audience received enthusiastically at Hunt's Craterian last night.

Here indeed is a picture with power for a public satiated with pap and spineless stories. Here is a picture to tap the vein of wanderlust in every man; a picture in tune with the changing times. Here is a picture of picturesque fellows with romance in their eyes, kicked, cuffed, beaten, hounded but finding adventure at every turn. Here is a picture of those strange anti-social beings, living without the law, wandering, drifting around, beggars of life.

To say the cast, headed by Wallace Beery; Louise Brooks and Richard Arlen, handled the characters well would be a platitude.

The picture is synchronized with sound and music effects; Wallace Beery in his tramp role even sings a song.

Linotype is Actuated by Wire Impulse

Invention Designed to Set Type by Telegraphic Mechanism—Hand Operation Unnecessary—Device of Special Value to Book Publishers.

By Howard W. Blakeslee, Associated Press Science Editor. ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 7.—(P) — A telegraph wire operated two newspaper typesetting machines here yesterday at the plant of the Rochester Times Union.

Dispatches by wire were transferred mechanically directly into the machines, with human touch eliminated, and were recorded in lines of metal type each as long as a news column is wide.

The object of the invention is to shorten the time and work required to transfer news from the place where it occurs to the printing office. It is designed to be another step in development of the distribution of the printed word, which began when movable type was invented by Johannes Gutenberg at Strasbourg in 1438.

The operation was a private demonstration held in the presence of a gathering of men who direct large printing and publishing enterprises. They were the guests of Frank E. Gammett, publisher of the Gammett newspapers, who by his backing sponsored the invention. Walter W. Moray of East Orange, New Jersey, invented the machine, known as a teletype setter, and the Morkrum-Klein-schmidt corporation of Chicago built it.

The sending was done in the demonstration room to two machines on the opposite side of the room, which were operated simultaneously from the same wire. One was a linotype and the other an Intertype. The short sending wire was made equivalent to a distance of 140 miles by resistance coils.

Punches Tape. The sender punched a tape seven-eighths of an inch wide, which operated the telegraph wire by sending impulses corresponding to the holes in the tape. At the receiving end an instrument a little larger than a typewriter produced a punched tape exactly similar to the sending tape. This receiving tape then ran automatically through a typesetting machine on a stand beside the typesetting machine. The little machine once more translated the tape holes into electrical impulses.

The electric waves were carried by a wire to an apparatus roughly resembling a large human hand, fastened to the side of the typesetting machine. Each metal finger controlled a number of letters and characters of the typesetting machine, which it released according to the impulse received, and when it gave the release signal, the typesetting machine functioned exactly as if a human operator had pressed down the key for a letter or character.

The teletype setter is a development of automatic telegraph printers, differing principally in but one respect, that it uses a tape with six punch units, instead of the standard five units. The extra unit is required to cover all characters of a typesetting machine, which outnumber those of automatic printers.

The sponsors predict special value for the teletypewriter in transmitting market quotations directly into type, and an opportunity for book publishers to save the expense of keeping large stores of metal type plates. Instead of metal plates, the tape may be filed ready for rerun when reprints are desired.

One sending can operate an indefinite number of typesetting machines, either in the same room or cities far apart. A receiving printer is provided, that without interfering with the automatic typesetting, enables an editor to read what is coming over the wire. The teletype setter stops automatically the moment anything stops the typesetting machine it feeds.

Neal Dow Baker, president of the Intertype Corporation of New York, a guest, said: "The teletypewriter is a device of extraordinary ingenuity which appears destined to effect a substantial modification of the composing methods of daily newspapers. Its practicability is not to be seriously questioned."

Notice. School District No. 22, Josephine County, Oregon, desires bids on drilling a 3-inch or 6-inch well, 100 feet or deeper. Driller to drive casing as deep as necessary. Address D. E. Heller, Clerk, Hugo, Oregon.

Vancover Wins. PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 7.—(P) The Vancouver, B. C. hockey team last night defeated Portland, three goals to nothing.
