"All it takes is a little shove and you're out of the snow," said a California motorist, who was explaining his tip over the Siskiyou mountains yesterday afternoon. "The paving is so slippery," he continued, "that if you drive even a trifle too fast around a curve, you can slip off the road as easily into a bank of snow. Once you are in the snow, you can never pull out unless you have chains, giving you sufficient traction to get back on the road. If you haven't chains, you can pull easily if several men push. I saw several cars in the ditch yesterday afternoon."

Duck hunting in Klamath county is becoming less of a problem, according to several local hunters who have been in the Klamath section during the past several days. The cold weather has formed ice on the lakes and when the ducks land on what they think is water, they hit the ice hard and slide for yards on top. If the water should happen to be open, the ducks before morning find themselves frozen in and the hunters only have to pick them out of the ice. Duck hunting along the Rogue river is very poor and only a few of the more hopeful amateurs attempt to hunt.

Fifty years ago, when Jackson county was young, the entire tax rolls were contained in one small book perhaps not having more than 100 pages and hardly over a foot square. But since then the county has shown such progress that now the tax rolls are contained in seven voluminous books of over 200 pages each, with one having nearly 300 pages. The books are in the neighborhood of three feet long and two feet wide. According to present plans, it is probable that the seventh book will be divided next year into two, making a total of eight books which will be in use.
