DECLARE SUNBURN BREAK UP COMETS

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—(AP)—Severe sunburn sometimes breaks up comets.

This sensitivity of comets to the sun's ultra-violet rays was reported to the American Association for the advancement of science by H. B. Maris and E. O. Hurlburt of the naval research laboratory, Washington.

They found several historically famous cases of comets either breaking in pieces, or flaring up, which followed magnetic storms on earth, by just the period necessary for the sunlight which caused the earth storm to have traveled the additional distance to the comet.

Their theory was that the terrestial magnetic storms are caused by flashes of ultra-violet light from the sun, and that these flashes seem to come from areas on the sun that are heated to more than 50,000 degrees fahrenheit.

On earth the noticeable effects of the ultra-violet flash are the rare displays of northern lights in temperate latitudes and the interference with telegraph wires and magnetic compasses that accompany magnetic storms.
