WINDOWS HERALD VALENTINE'S DAY

The game of hearts is on. From every window throughout the business district now, the little red valentines are beginning to peep and play. Some smile shyly forth from subtle layers of lacy framework, as though apologizing for their privilege. Others, in the outer world, offer no excuse for their unbridled existence, except that Valentine's day is approaching. There is a whimsicality about the Valentine's day decoration that is reflected in the attitude of the merchants whose windows they adorn. It is the sort of a humorous acceptance of the place of such little things as "hearts" in the hard routine of the business world. And for the reason, if for none other, for the time-honored saint who started this seasonal observation be praised.
