RAFFETY SEES STATE TRAFFIC WORK DEVELOP

Chief of Oregon Department Only Paid Traffic Officer in 1919—Force Now Numbers 31—Collisions Injure Many.

During the course of a decade in which he has been connected with the state traffic department, dating back to 1919, when he was the only paid officer doing traffic work in the state, State Traffic Chief T. A. Raffety has seen a remarkable change in Oregon, as far as motoring conditions are concerned. He revealed several interesting facts during an interview in Medford yesterday, preparatory to leaving for his headquarters in Salem, following several days spent in this city and in Ashland.

He has seen the growth of the state traffic department from one man to three and then to the present number of 31, stationed in various sections of the state. During 1928, members of the department patrolled 981,511 miles, as compared to 15,780 in 1920, and since the establishment of the department, officers have a credit of 1,477,340 miles to their credit. Such distance to make ten round trips or so to a stellar constellation.

Since 1920, stolen cars valued at over $415,447 have been recovered and $324,952.61 has been paid in the state in fines. In round figures, the state has received $882,886 through the traffic department, but its value to the state, in the opinion of Chief Raffety, is not in the amount of money returned to its coffers, but the amount of road received from the department by the motoring public.

Collisions Menace.
In 1928 auto fatalities numbered 293, of which approximately 50 per cent were attributed to auto collisions, with the remaining number of deaths resulting from motorists running off grades, hitting telephone poles and turning over. Eleven of these deaths occurred in Jackson county. Officers made 5,277 arrests and issued $3,847 warning slips and engaged in 89,694 other activities, showing to the public that the life of a traffic officer is not as easy as it may seem. The activities took in such matters as offering advice to motorists, straightening out auto collision details and giving attention to other sundry matters.

Officers last year made 41,121 visits to cities and towns all over Oregon, doing a bit of work in each. Traffic collisions in 1928 in Oregon had the large total of 29,787, with the majority of a minor nature. However, 5921 people were injured and 192 killed. The present percentage indicates that 57 per cent of every 100 people in collisions are injured, and out of every 100 injured, 2.5 per cent are killed. Casualties in 1928, with 15,893 collisions credited against it.

Car Beau.
The day of the commonly known speed cop is over, said Chief Raffety, and he will never return. "I could hire 1000 'red cops,'" he said, "but it takes careful work in fixing a traffic officer. The old-time officer was more of a revenue worker for the town or county for which he worked, receiving a commission for each arrest and fine, but the present day traffic officer is of a far different type. It is his aim to work with the motoring public, educate them in traffic rules and come to their assistance. He is not to be feared, like the obsolete speed cop, but to be looked upon as a friend, supported by the law in cases where arrest is absolutely necessary. He does not lie on the road. If in wait for prey, but patrols the highways, to be of assistance to those who need him and to correct errors of fellow drivers."

When he was first appointed to do traffic work, which was about the same time the state legislature passed the driver's license law in 1912, Chief Raffety spent a short time in Medford and other southern Oregon points. There were only 65,000 licensed automobiles in the state and part of them were run without licenses. On checking up in one southern Oregon city, he found a man holding public office and operating an auto on a California license over two years old.

Those Were the Days.
Those were the days when motorists could hang pasteboards on their cars with the familiar words, "License applied for," but today such motorists could hardly be seen on the highway without being warned to obtain a new license. At that time the establishment of a state traffic department had been hardly considered, and Chief Raffety was employed as a deputy out of the office of the secretary of state.

Today he is at the head of one of the best organized traffic departments in the west, both in system and the high efficiency of its members. The department is represented in Jackson county by three officers, who are considered by motorists as true friends of the road. Lieutenant G. O. Nichols, Sergeant C. P. Talent and Herb Moore, make up the county staff.

MRS. D'AUTREMONT WILL MOVE NEAR IMPRISONED SONS

Mrs. Belle D'autremont, mother of Roy, Ray and Hugh, the Shastah valley bandits, who are now serving life sentences in the penitentiary at Salem, has at last sold her little grocery store at Lakeview, New Mexico, and will leave within the near future for the Oregon state capital to be near her sons.

After the conviction of Hugh, and the sentencing of her three boys to life in June, 1927, Mrs. D'autremont returned to her store on the desert of New Mexico with the hope of selling out and moving to Salem immediately.

Shortly after her departure for the south, Hazel D'autremont, the 13 year old wife of Ray, with her 15 months old baby, Jackie Hush, left her home in Hanging Rock, Ohio, and rode all the way to Eugene in a day coach, to be with her husband. She and the mother of the boys had planned on living together at Salem as soon as the latter could dispose of her Lakeview property.

But Mrs. Belle D'autremont found it impossible to find a buyer for a more than that out of the way location, and she the months went on Hazel became discouraged and returned to her Ohio home. It is thought that she will return to Oregon as soon as the mother of the boys arrives here.

NOBLIT RETURNS FROM SPORTSMEN'S MEETING

H. L. Noblit returned today from Portland and Salem where he met with the delegations from the Jackson County Game Protective Association and the Trout Valley League of Grants Pass in their conference with the governor and legislative members. The delegations spent the first day in conference with the various commissions in the interest of favorable game river legislation.

CRATERIAN SCENARIO WRITTEN BY NEPHEW OF CHAS. C. FURNAS

The sensation of attending a movie and discovering out of a clear sky that the scenario was written by one of his relatives, was one experienced by C. C. Furnas, part owner of the Medford Service Station, when he saw the picture, "The Flying Fleet," which opened at Hunt's Craterian yesterday.

The talking picture, starring Ramon Novarro, was written by Richard Shager, nephew of Mr. Furnas, who is the author of a number of late successes. His biggest hit, before the present picture was "Tell It to the Marines," starring Lon Chaney.
