A mountain lion, one of the few killed in this county during the past year, was trapped a short time ago in the trail section by John Warner, who appeared with the pelt at the county clerk's office this forenoon to collect a $10 bounty. Warner had set a trap for a skunk, but found the lion caught in the trap with three of its toes, and apparently had made little effort to break loose, fearing to lose the skin, causing it to lose its life instead.

Obituary

PLYMALE. — Victor Plymale, who died at the Good Samaritan hospital in San Francisco, following an operation, was born at Jacksonville, Ore., August 9, 1876. He was the son of W. J. and Josephine L. Plymale, early pioneers. His early life was spent in St. Mary's academy in Jacksonville, later moving to San Francisco, where he engaged in business.

His early passion is regretted by a host of friends, and comes as a blow to his family, he having passed all his years in the north-west edge of Tule lake in Klamath county has been divided up into 28 homestead tracts and will be thrown open to settlement March 15th.

He is survived by his wife, Gertrude Plymale; four sisters, Mrs. Kate M. Collins of Medford, Mrs. Emaline Stine of Oakland, Mrs. Ada C. Jones of San Francisco and Mrs. Ben H. Fairchild of Yreka, and by two brothers, Dr. David H. Plymale of Burkesfield and Walter M. Plymale of Selma, Cal.

NICHOLS. — Edward Francis Nichols died at the home of his son Charles Nichols, 1216 Locust street early Monday morning of paralysis, aged 86 years, 21 days. Born in Illinois February 4, 1849.

The family came to Oregon and settled in the city of Medford, arriving at Redding, Calif., before the railroad was completed and coming from there by team and wagon, settling in Sams Valley and living there seven years. Afterwards deposed homesteaded a farm in the Table Rock district.

Deceased leaves his wife Annie, one son, and one daughter: Charles and George A. Medford; Elmer, Gladis, Ore.; Bert, Yuba City, Calif.; Roy, Central Point, Ore.; daughter, Mrs. Mollie Cook, Medford. Also sixteen grandchildren.

Smiles and Tears

It's been a long time since tears went out and smiles came in. And everybody knows that today smiles have the stage. Never before in the history of the world, perhaps, has a group of a tear been put down with greater scornfulness. It's become American tradition to not everything with a smile. And maybe it ought to be that way. And yet and yet.

Water freely, but do not keep the soil wet constantly. Ferns require plenty of light but do not require much sun; in fact, the north window is a very good place for them. Graceful ferns make very beautiful ornaments in a room, and add to the attractiveness of the furnishings.

The palm is a tropical plant of which there are several varieties. The Kentia, irrandom of palms, Cocot Weddelliana, daintiest of palms. Phoenix, Canariensis or date palm perhaps are the most common.

Palms, like ferns, require the light but are not particular about the soil. They are harder than ferns and require less care. Do not let the dirt dry out in the pots as they seem to take quite a lot of moisture. Frequent watering of the whole plant is good and will not injure the palm.

Other kinds of foliage plants require about the same care as palms. E. H.

After all, it isn't the laughter of folks that endears them to us so much. And it isn't their joys that bring them nearest. It's their sorrows, their trials, the things they have to bear—even if they're things that can become jokes afterward, when stress is over, and something to laugh about then. And doesn't too much laughter tend to make trouble and tears?

All the calendar days aren't clear days. And if nature needs rains and clouds for the evolution of natural things, tears and sorrows and storms in human life may be for our development. We can't cure a thing by denying it, turning our backs on it. We can't alter a fact thereby. And with our growing proneness to giggle everything off, to refuse to face the fact of suffering, to deny grief a right to be, what's to become of those who must know sorrow and tears—and there are so many!

Sometimes, smiles can be very, very brave. But sometimes they can be very cruel. And more often than not, they can also be very cowardly. To face life and its vicissitudes with a smile to save others from discouragement, or to much cheerfulness in our hearts. To face everything, everything in life, with a smile is quite another because it breeds a levity concerning everything of life, even depths of agony and great social and personal wrongs, and a callousness toward deep pain, a heartless impatience with it in others, and a unwillingness toward facing suffering with a deeper fortitude.

It's so much easier just to laugh it off, you see. Yet laughing off things that shouldn't have been laughed at brought the French Revolution. On the other hand, the understandable loneliness in Gethsemane and the understanding response to it, make the agony of Christ such a poignant and precious thing to remember.

So maybe, after all, we should smile if we want to, laugh if we must. But we should not smile so long and so hard and so persistently that we forget to be sensitive to the lone suffering of some other poor heart, or brood in ourselves a contemptuous disregard for sober and serious things that should be viewed with more thoughtful gravity and compassion. Laughter can chase away some forms of gloom. It never can fall to turn the knife in a wound that means real soul-terror for some other human being. Such a being is hungry for the comfort of a knowing heart, which has suffered too, has wept bitterly, too, perhaps, and so has won its way over the hard rocks of experience to the sublimity of feeling another's woe with the understanding, the compassion, that come only with experience.—Editorial—Household Magazine.

FRENCH CONVICTS LIVE IN SILENCE AND IN SOLITUDE

FRESNES-LES-RUNGIS, France (AP)—In a house of silence, 1,250 white-masked men, live without ever hearing each other's voices or seeing each other's faces.

They never hear their names spoken from the day they enter until the day they leave. It is France's model prison, known simply as "Fresnes," the last word in physical and mental isolation.

Solitary confinement, usually considered severely strict discipline, is the rule. The prisoners eat alone, sleep alone, work alone and even take their hour's daily exercise alone and in absolute silence.

Straight of all, several hundred at a time gather in the chapel, each in a little cell, seeing no one except the priest, preacher or lecturer and part of his face visible only to the prison on the platform. The men enter the chapel hooded, go to numbered cells, which are in banked tiers, each cell open only in front at the height of one's eyes, but with an aperture too small for the head to pass.

From the moment a metal number is hung around his neck, the prisoner is required to wear a white hood whenever he leaves his cell and he may not speak to his fellows. He sees the face of his guard from time to time, but no other, unless he is sent to the hospital or to the warden for discipline.

Alone in his cell, he works eight hours a day, but good will and skill enable him to reduce the time to six hours and the money he earns enables him to buy small comforts. The government receives 32 cents a day from contractors for each prisoner's work and gives from three-tenths to half the money to the prisoner. The prisoner never sees the money until he leaves, but half of it is placed to his immediate credit for his little expenses.

Yet in spite of all that many criminals ask to be sent here because the solitude entitles them to a reduction of one-fourth of their sentences.

CELEBRATED ARTIST ILL AND LONELY

GRES-SUR-LOING, France (AP)—Half paralyzed and almost blind, one of the acclaimed composers of the world, Frederic Delius, is spending the remaining days of his life in this tiny hamlet about fifty miles from Paris.

The man who imagined the music for "Koenig" and "Margot et Rouge" no longer writes music; his greatest effort is to shelter himself from the world. Each day his devoted wife reads him the French, German and English newspapers, then, if the weather is good, he is pushed in a wheel chair to the river that flows at the foot of his garden for an hour or so of fresh air.

Even the touch of his beloved piano is denied him, for his hands tremble so that they cannot find the keys. The recollections that has come to him of recent years was too late, for Delius cannot hear the pianists that are accorded his compositions.
