MAKE MEDFORD A NATIONAL AIRPORT

THERE is really no valid argument against the passage of the airport bonds on April 2nd. As a result the only danger lies in public indifference, the feeling that the bonds will pass anyway, so there is no need for you,—and you,—and you,—to go to the polls.

Our recent experience, however, has so clearly demonstrated the dangers of such over-confidence that we feel a large majority of the qualified voters will see that nothing interferes with the exercise of their franchise on the first Tuesday of next month. If this is true, then the $120,000 bond issue will be voted, as it should be.

There are no valid arguments on the negative side of this proposition for the simple reason that the conditions which might justify opposition to municipal bond issues in general do not exist, regarding this particular one.

In fact, when one carefully studies the local situation, regarding aviation, it becomes perfectly plain that the only real issue involved in the election of April 2nd is this: Shall Medford remain on the air map of the United States or get off? It would be very nice if someone else would build the airport for us, but no one else will,—neither Uncle Sam nor some benevolent airplane manufacturer.

True, Medford has the strategic position. But the history of American transportation is full of places which had the strategic position, and then fell off the transportation map into oblivion, because they thought that was enough. Not so many years ago Jacksonville had the strategic position and decided "we need to do nothing the railroad must come to us." But the railroad never came.

And the railroad of the future, which is the railroad of the air, will never come to Medford unless the conditions which are demanded, and only a new airport can supply, are provided.

So we repeat, the big issue and the only real one, is whether Medford wishes to remain on the national air map, and realize its present and future opportunities, or throw them into the ash heap and get off.

MEDFORD has faced similar opportunities in the past, and never has failed to take advantage of them. In all its history, in matters of equal importance, it has never failed to step forward, it has invariably refused to step backward.

We are confident the people of Medford will do the same thing on April 2nd, and approve the $120,000 bond issue by an overwhelming majority.

BIG VOTE ASSURED FOR AIR BONDS

The airport publicity committee is doing such notable work on advertising the special bond election to be held here on April 2nd, that a big vote can be looked for for each voter will be well aware of the day of the election, as constant reminders of that big event face him or her.

Smudge Smoke

A rate hearing was held here Friday and Saturday. Many local people attended and their brows bulged, and they were dazed by the ponderosity of the questions.

The weather has been unruly, like a lot of the kids. Shindigs flourished throughout southern Oregon last night, with a fair attendance, as usual.

HISTORIC CHAIR OWNED LOCALLY

A cane bottom chair that once set austerly in the office of John Turnbull first governor of the state of Connecticut, and had, without a doubt been occupied at various times by George Washington, who frequented that suite during the trying days of young America, is now the property of William Lyman of Medford, and was exhibited at the D. A. R. convention which closed a three-day session here yesterday morning.

Mr. Lyman's great-great-grand father lived in the same town (Lebanon, Connecticut) and was a close friend of the governor of the state, besides being personally acquainted with the first president.

LYLE FISHER PEARS BRING HIGH PRICE IN BRITISH MARKET

When the C. and E. Fruit company of Medford awarded Lyle M. Fisher of Sams Valley a prize hat on the quality of pears he produced in his orchards last year, he set the chapeau at a thoughtful angle on his head and decided to reach even a higher goal this year.
