Ye Smudge Pot

By Arthur Perry
Hop, Bert Haney, a democrat, has been mentioned for governor, and it behooves the Republican party to watch its knitting in the primary, and not nominate a metropolitan windhammer, or a rural wren, who was a member of the last legislature, as under the Oregon System, luck instead of qualifications, is the deciding factor.

The Bill Green wheat is hard high, lush green, and in dire need of rain.
CHEMEKETANS TO VISIT CALAPOOYA—(Hollie Salem Capital-Journal.) Let us have a few smart cracks about Russian and Welsh names.

Uptate autists, alleged to have been endeavoring to mix gasoline and moonshine, failed to knock a snobose off the crossing Sunday, the caboose, which is attached to the tail-end of a train, is not as rugged as the locomotive, which is generally attached to the front-end of a train, but is too much for pleasure cars.

Statesmen of the land have cooked up another scheme for the abolition of war. It won't work, as no provision is made for the elimination of profits, or the eradication of human enmity.

CHIVALRY CROPS OUT (Frisco Dispatch)
Some smokers can't get a cough out of a carload of cigarettes, but Mrs. Clare S. Edwards is trying to get a divorce out of a package. According to her complaint on file here against David C. Edwards, her husband, he became so enraged when he saw her smoking a cigarette that he threw her to the floor, sat on her chest and forced her to eat a package of cigarettes one by one.

A school row is raging at Eugene, the educational seat of the commonwealth. It concerns three male teachers. This is unique. A school row to amount to anything should concern a schoolmarm, and the son of a prominent citizen and heavy taxpayer, who got what was coming to him.

THE CRUSADE

The W. E. F. announces that it will devote the year 1929 to stamping out the Coca Cola habit. In the face of the hydra-headed menace of Coca Cola to our Puritan civilization, we fly into a great state of calm. At the spectacle of men returning home, sodden with Coca Cola, to beat their wives, the sight of little children tugging at their fathers as they stand at the Coca Cola bars long after midnight, to get them to come home to mama, we remain unmoved. Workmen, victims in the grip of the Coca Cola habit, may squander their money across the marble soda fountain counters instead of saving it to pay installments on the home, and we harden our heart against the sight. Innocent girls, with passions which they themselves only half understand released by the pernicious drug, may gaze at us bleary eyed, but we still remain indifferent to the anti-Coca Cola crusade of the good ladies. If they succeed in saving the world from the grip of Coca Cola, to them is all the credit. The trumpets and banners of reform sweep by, and we stand ready to leave the first stone.

WILL THE JONES LAW CHANGE PROHIBITION?

THE LOS ANGELES EXPRESS claims the much-advertised Jones law has already doubled the price of bottled liquor, and has spiked the guns of the Wets who have persistently maintained Prohibition can't be enforced. The first claim may be conceded, for the current price of bottle liquor is a fact easily determined, and it is reasonable to believe the editorial writer of the Express knows whereof he speaks.

But any unanimity regarding the second proposition is impossible now as before the famous Federal Dry statute was adopted. For there is no agreement as to what enforcement means.

Perhaps President Hoover's commission can throw some light on this latter point. Are the American people, for example, consuming more alcoholic liquor now than before the Prohibition law was passed?

The Wets will claim they are. The Drys will claim they are not. What is the truth?

We don't know. We know no one else who knows. But a committee of investigation could no doubt find out. And when that fact is determined there will be a start at least toward finding out whether or not from a practical standpoint the Prohibition law can be enforced.

We fail to see, however, where there is any justification for the Los Angeles newspaper's optimism. This Jones law, in no way, changes the elements of the Prohibition situation.

In the first place, it is only a federal law—only applies to federal liquor cases—representing a small percentage of liquor violations in this country.

In the second place, and more important—it does not, as so many people seem to think, automatically increase the penalties of such violations. The minimum penalty for a first offense, for example, is precisely what it was—that is, nothing. The minimum penalty for a second offense was, and still remains, $200 fine or one month in jail. The Jones law, in short, makes no change whatever in minimum penalties.

There is a change in maximum penalties. Under the old law the maximum for first offenders was $1000 and six months in jail, and for the second offenders $2000 and five years in jail. The Jones law merely retains the five years in jail pertaining to second offenders, but increases the maximum fine from $2000 to $10,000.

In other words, Federal judges are given the right to impose $1,000 fines and five-year jail sentences upon old offenders, if they WISH to, but this does not mean they WILL. In the first conviction brought under the Jones law the judge, in fact, declared publicly he did not believe in the law and he only gave the defendant a small fine, with no jail sentence.

So there you are, and there we are, just about where we were before the Jones law was passed. The price of bootleg liquor may have doubled, but a vast majority of the violators of the Dry Law do not care what it costs, if they only can get it.

As has frequently been stated, no law is stronger than public opinion behind it. ONLY as public opinion behind a law changes will the enforcement of that law change.

The best hope, therefore, of those who believe the Prohibition law is essentially right, lies, as we see it, not in the Jones law or any other law, but in the possibility that, under the leadership of President Hoover, and in the light of the information his commission may secure, public opinion regarding this law WILL CHANGE.

MODEL WILL DISPLAY HOT STYLES IN MANN WINDOW TOMORROW

Feminine shoppers will witness a millinery style show on North Central tomorrow, when Charlotte Bemis, local milliner will present a living model in Mann's Department store window, who will don the leading headgear fashions for the spring season. The very latest in Easter bonnets will be shown and Mildred will be able to see herself at church on Easter morn, as well as in becoming models for street wear, sport and dress, suitable to this season's dictates. The demonstration will be held between three and four o'clock tomorrow afternoon, with Hester Whitman modeling. Miss Bemis, who took over the management of Mann's millinery department six weeks ago, when she arrived here from California, has not only made a number of friends in Medford, but has won the confidence and support of a large clientele, because of the service she has given her buyers.

BEACON BEAMS WILL PLAY FROM S. P. LAWN

The two and one-half million candle power revolving beacon light for use in aviation night flying, of the type to be installed at the local airport, if the airport bonds carry, will be installed on the Espee lawn near the Chamber of Commerce building for demonstration and to permit the public to obtain an idea, as to its size. After a couple of days, it will be moved to the top of a local building, probably the Liberty building, and will operate from that point, and residents of districts 15 or 20 miles away can see its beams at night. Copco workers will install the light at both places. Portland.—$1,350,000 United States Veterans' hospital on Marquam hill recently dedicated. Klamath Falls.—Plans completed for installation of cottage cheese plant here. New bus service between Astoria and Seaside recently established.

DISINFECT IN THE HOME.

The untanned mayor of a corruptly governed city where the citizens are too timid to protest against exploitation of public office by the politicians or to take steps to punish the traitors recently visited a minor courtroom where many of the dirt-ruff and ranting are herded for trial. The mayor detected a foul odor, and made himself and his community ridiculous by announcing that he was going to order the health department to fumigate the courtroom immediately.

In this same timid town there is an ordinance prohibiting the sale of bedding at second hand—the implication being that there is some risk of spread of disease by bedding that has been used. For something like 18 or 20 years the health officer of Timid Town (there have been three or three of him in that time I think) has been appealing annually to the town council for an ordinance to prohibit the sale of pipeless gas stoves, because in Timid Town there is an annual death rate from accidental poisoning of people by such dangerous heaters. For 18 or 20 years the honorable council of Timid Town has respectfully received the health officer's appeal and referred the matter to some commission that makes care of such embarrassments. Meanwhile the population of Timid Town suffers the loss of a dozen or two more or less worthless lives each year, and the pipeless gas stove business thrives lustily. It seems the pipeless gas stove makers and merchants know how to make the politicians behave in Timid Town. What are a dozen or more lives to good businessmen?

Schoolrooms in Timid Town and even the public library, have been "fumigated" from time to time, these many years, when there was a considerable or a scare on. When you wish to see intelligence, health intelligence, at its lowest level, visit the public schools or the public library of Timid Town. The mayor of Timid Town was not so extraordinarily silly in his belief that the unpleasant odor he detected in the courtroom called for fumigation by the health department. Doubtless thousands of other citizens of the town who snugly think themselves on a higher plane of intelligence than the mayor, believe in such risks, too. In fact it is only a year or two since the health department of Timid Town ceased the practice of terminal fumigation, and I am not sure that the health authorities do not still raise a bit of smoke or a powerful stench on the premises after certain infectious disease even today.

The irony of this, if any is that all these funny ideas and practices in Timid Town are due, not so much to ignorance of the people as to the workings of political graft.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
On Osteopathy We're Offagin
What do you think of an osteopath on backache and hemorrhoids? Do you think I would be safe in trying them for such trouble? I have tried others, too.—H. C. H.
Answer—This is an embarrassing query, for only the other day I received a great shower of letters from osteopaths who thanked me for my fairness and broad-mindedness toward their craft. I must tell you, friend, that if I were in your place I should certainly not trifle with any kind of healer who purports to follow any kind of patly. But if you are determined to fool with this and that brand of healing, there are plenty bidding for patronage that are far inferior to the osteopaths in every respect.

No Nonsense in This Column. Will feeding Whole Wheat bread to children prevent them from getting appendicitis?—Mrs. D. H. W.
Answer—From the fact that you capitalize whole wheat I surmise that you've been reading somebody's hokum. The notion that whole wheat will prevent appendicitis is mere nonsense.

Good Food. Is it injurious to one's health to eat half a pound of whole wheat bread a day? Also in there such a thing as eating too much lettuce? I eat lettuce without any dressing at all hours of the day.—Mrs. A. W.
Answer—No, to both questions. Half a pound of bread, whether plain bread or whole wheat bread, contains the same amount of nutriment as a pound of lean beef. Whole wheat bread contains a little more vitamin and mineral matter than white bread, but unless the diet is restricted to bread alone this doesn't matter, for you get the vitamins and minerals in lettuce or other fruits or vegetables in your diet.

Cauliflower. Has cauliflower any real food value?—C. J. B.
Answer—The same nutritive value as cabbage, not over 150 calories in the pound. Both cauliflower and cabbage are valuable items in the diet because of the natural roughage they furnish, their vitamins and their mineral elements, mainly calcium, phosphorus and sulphur. For my health, when I have the opportunity, just because they're darn good eating.

The Arcadians Almost Extinct. I had your formula put up and can truthfully say I have benefited wonderfully. Do you smoke? Cigars or pipe?—E. A. L.
Answer—I was once an Arcadian, but never got the inspiration to take up Barrie's challenge. Walnut elicits it, I think. (Copyright John F. Dille Co.)

Give Night Flight at Barber Field Saturday, Sunday

The airport committee has arranged a novel stunt for Saturday and Sunday evenings of this week at the air field on the fairgrounds. A General Electric floodlight of 20,000 candlepower will be demonstrated both evenings and the Sanders Aeronautical school will give night flights to those who desire to go up. The field will be brilliantly lighted with the big light, which is like those used for lighting the municipal ports at Salt Lake City, Oakland and other cities. This will be well worth driving to the fairgrounds to see and if desired Medford may be seen by night from the air.

Milton Sills in a new type of role in his latest picture, "Love and the Devil," opened at the Rialto last night. For the time being Sills drops his backwoodsman, wrecking boss types and dons dress suits and the polished manners in his portrayal of Lord Dryan, the English explorer, who falls in love with a woman's picture.

He goes through the trials and tribulations that pursue the love affair of the staid Britisher and the temperamental Italian prima donna, and again demonstrates that Milton Sills is one of the finest actors on the screen today.
