CHIEF RANGER OF PARK IN MEDFORD DURING WEEK END

W. C. Godfrey, chief ranger of Crater National park, who has been on duty for over a week at Ann Spring camp, since his arrival in Medford from Yosemite National park, where he had been employed as chief ranger for the past two years, spent the week end in Medford with E. C. Solinsky, Crater National park superintendent, who accompanied him back to Ann Spring camp this forenoon for a day or two there.

Mr. Godfrey, who is an all-around park ranger, is exceptionally versatile, and because of being a naturalist and gifted artist, was also in charge of all the naturalist or educational work in the Yosemite park. He came to Crater park as chief ranger, as the personal choice of Horace Albright, director of the national parks system, taking the place left vacant last fall by the resignation of J. W. Chase.

Prior to entering the national park service at Yosemite the new chief ranger of Crater park was employed in the Klamath forest as ranger for six years.

Heavy liquidation appeared toward the close as anxiety over the money outlook increased, and many representative industrials were driven down from five to 20 points.

United States Steel and American Telephone and Telegraph were among the heavy losers.
