

NEWS of the DAY in PICTURES

THIS COSTUME, designed by Jenkins, New York, helps to solve the problem of what bridal attendants should wear. The apron effect of the ivory taffeta frock and the unusual plume are new and interesting.

A WHIRLING FIGURE suddenly stops, an arm flashes out like a whip and, far into the air, a circular plate goes sailing—that is the discus thrower doing his stuff. Tom Churchill is shown here at the instant of his pitch at the Penn Relays. The discus went 125 feet 2 inches.

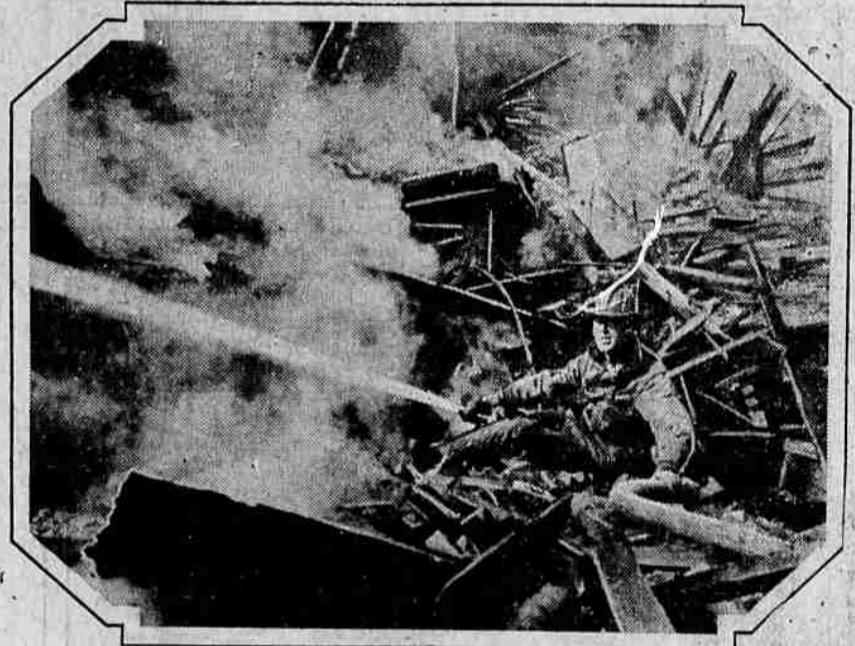

THIS FLIVVER WENT WILD the other day in Port Townsend, Wash., knocked down a telephone pole and paused at the edge of a 100-foot bluff. It was dragged back and put into service again.

THE PROPOSED NEW TRIANGLE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS south of Pennsylvania avenue in the national capital will be almost a city in itself. At the top is a view along Pennsylvania avenue, looking west from the capitol. A view of the Triangle from Fifteenth street looking east is shown in the center, and below is the view along Pennsylvania avenue looking from Fifteenth street toward the capitol. The Federal building project will make the capital a city of beautiful architecture.

BESIDES BEING champion doughnut salesman of the Denver, Colo., Campfire Girls, Eunice Welch has won four national and three local Campfire honors. Besides she sold 231 dozen doughnuts for her organization.

ALL A PART OF THE DAY'S WORK for a fireman. The smoke-eater pictured here is pouring water on the smoldering ruins of what once was a city block at Muskogee, Okla.

FIVE HUNDRED YEARS AGO a young lady like this was one of Europe's greatest warriors. The girl shown above is Miss Susan Molitor and she played the part of Joan of Arc in an anniversary celebration in France.
