The recital given at the Christian church last Monday evening by the violin pupils of the Falkenberg studio was a brilliant success. The first part of the program was by the Junior orchestra, interspersed with solos, duets, and trios by the little musicians. The case and hand with which these children handled the bow, playing such melodies as "Foot and Peasant" overture; "Soldiers of the Starry Flag," elicited exclamations of pleasure.

Edith Brooks, a wee little lass of seven summers, played "Old Folks at Home" with perfect accuracy and feeling. Other juvenile soloists were Mayme Durkee, Tom Schatz and Clifford Ayers, all of whom did their parts perfectly.

Of the more advanced musicians enjoyed as were the numbers by the senior orchestra.

Beethoven's "First Symphony", and "Mignonette" were beautifully rendered by the orchestra. Dances "Fifth Air Varié," "Blue Belle of Scotland" and Krebeler's "Rondino"; Beethoven's "Slavonic Melody" and "Minute in G, No. 2"; "Sourvenir," by Dreda; "Hungarian Melody," by Brahms; "Gnomentanz," by Eberhardt; and "Berceuse," by Hanser were some of the compositions which were skillfully played by these young people. Ruth Chitwood, Orville Vandyphor, Esther Alexander, Chas. Gallion, Orval Blair, Ruby Wandell.

"Selections from the Opera" by Rosmini and Weaver was beautifully played by a quartet led by Miss Phyllis Swearingin.

The accompanists were Gracela Spinder, and Mrs. Lela M. Folkner.

It was a most enjoyable occasion and parents and friends were greatly encouraged to see the rapid progress being made by these young people.

COLORFUL DAYS OF WILLIAMS CREEK PIONEER RE-TOLD

(Mrs. C. W. Roerts)

Mrs. Mary John, lovingly known to all friends as Grandma John, passed her ninety-second birthday, March tenth, 1929. Her life has been a life such as few of the present generation can never know and can but dimly comprehend. Born in Ohio in the year of 1837 she came to Oregon a young wife when she was but nineteen years old. Her husband having crossed the plains the year before. She with a couple of children, to San Francisco by train for New York City where they took ship for San Francisco on the John M. Sullivan. After a miserable voyage of storm and seasickness they reached Astoria on the Isthmus of Panama. Crossing the isthmus on a little narrow gauge train they again took ship and crossed to San Francisco. After a short rest they again took ship for Crescent City. There was then no deep harbor at Crescent City so the ship had to come some distance out. The passengers were each wrapped in the old Stars and Stripes, strapped into a chair and let down over the side of the vessel onto a lighter and from that they were transferred to a raft and brought in still nearer to shore where they clambered onto a dray which was backed out into the surface as far as was safe and so was driven off to the only hotel in the place.

After a day or two wait they joined a donkey pack train for Kirbyville (now Kirby). Mrs. John was given the only horse in the train to ride. After three days travel, camping at night by the side of the trail crossing canyons and ravines with streams swollen by spring rains and mudslides often having to tuck their feet up on top of their mount to keep them dry and so arrived at Kirbyville. She was met at Kirbyville by her husband and Mr. Godfrey. They lived at Kirbyville for more than eight months and in that time she never saw a white woman, but she had a white Mexican cook to look curiously at a white Mexican cook. They came to Williamsburg (now Williams) in 1861, arriving on Christmas Eve, where a Christmas dance and general good time was in progress but being entire strangers, felt rather lonely and so retired to their room but not to sleep. Some days later, Mr. Godfrey was drowned in the Applegate while making a trip to Jacksonville, and it being the days before telephones it was two or three days before she knew of the awful accident.

Alone except for an infant daughter, among strange hundreds of miles from her people, being of the staunch pioneer stock of the pilgrim fathers she carried bravely on through days that tried men's hearts but which brought out the best and forged friendships which nothing could break.

She married Mr. John in 1865 he having sailed around Cape Horn from Wales (in the same ship in which she had sailed from New York the year before, the John M. Sullivan.)

Mrs. John had lived to see travel advanced from the sailing vessel and the pack train to the automobile and the flying machine and the submarine; lighting from the tallow knot, the grease lamp, and the tallow candles, molded at home, to the pushing of a button and flooding a whole city with light; cooking from the old Dutch oven and the skillet and lid in front of an open fire to the electric range which sets itself, from the weekly mail to the daily rural route; the wireless and the telephone and the radio with news, music and lectures from out the air.

Our old pioneers are passing. But few are left such as she. They made possible all these modern conveniences and luxuries we now enjoy and we stand with uncovered heads and thankful hearts before them.

The trail, the forest, the mountain stream, have been conquered, but to us there is left a different task, the white man's burden, the brotherhood of man.

May we be given the courage, the strength, the wisdom to do our task as bravely as she, as wisely as they did theirs, that the coming generations may look to us with as much gratitude as we to them.

Poppies and Memorial Day

The making of poppies by patients of our Hospital 77 receiving no compensation is proving a joy, indeed. Our poppy chairman writes us that one man who has a wife and two children said: "This is the first money I have earned in 18 months." This patient has been paid $25 and is making more poppies.

Several men volunteered to make poppies for a "buddy" who is slowly dying of an incurable disease. This man has a wife and four small children. Two thousand poppies have been turned in to this man's credit. The first check for $10 was presented to this man wedding anniversary and tears streamed down their faces when they learned what the "boys" had done for them.

Medford's quota is 4500 poppies, which are being sold rapidly.

AUSTIN, TEXAS—(AP) Who started as a hobby for Mark Wiggins, secretary to Governor Austin, has become profitable. He began with a few chickens in the back yard. In the last two months he sold 27,000 eggs from his 625 hens.

SUN—Girl Informs Parents

BRADFORD, Va.—(AP) The ideal mother listens sympathetically to her daughter's account of a high school love affair, she writes.

So declares Mary Harmon, high school girl of this city, who won the prize in an essay contest on "The Kind of Home Children Like."

Mary gives the fathers some advice, too. Instead of taking Jimmy to task and giving him a whipping after he has been in a fight she thinks the ideal dad will find out why the fight was begun. If the reason was a good one, he is urged to commend the boy for not being a coward.

"Parents should welcome the school friends their children bring home as real, important, people, not just as 'kids,'" she writes.

The contest was conducted by the Virginia federation of women's clubs.
