GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: Jerry Ogden tells the story of his father's last night as Alex Peterson, overlord of Turridity—a story revealed by Andrew Ogden just before he was murdered. Peterson's younger brother, "Jerry," was sentenced by miners' trial to hang for robbery. Defying the men pursuing his brother, Alex looks "derry" into the Peterson mine and demands that they delay their hanging until morning so that he may examine their evidence. Alex tries to bribe Joe Lundy, whose gold "derry" admits stealing, but Lundy, fearing the mob, refuses. They agree to wait until sunrise.

CHAPTER 36.
A Night of Horror.
Deacon and I sat breathless as Jerry paused momentarily. The suspense was terrific, and it was a distinct relief when Jerry resumed. "It was just nine by Dad's watch. The sun rose at four. He had seven hours' grace and he knew he was in for the highest night of his life. "Dad was ready to spend every dollar he possessed to save Uncle Jerry, but whether it was an honest acceptance of his offer that Lundy had in mind, or not, he couldn't decide. That sense of 'something else' buzzing in Lundy's head wouldn't let go of him.

"Dad struck off towards the town. Burke, Webb and Fitch fell in 100 feet or so behind him. A terrific din was pouring out of Lundy's place. Shouting, laughing, women squealing ragtime on a tiny piano, and all that. A hush fell as Dad entered. He went up to the bar and bought a drink. "Where's Lundy?" he asked.

"The bartender seemed nervous. "Upstairs," he replied. "Dad made his way towards the gallery stairs, Fitch, Burke and Webb came in. "Dad stood at the top of the stair and looked down into the hall. The piano had started again and the crowd was milling around the floor or drinking at the bar. They all seemed to have as good a time as Lundy's place could offer them. Dad said, as he watched them, it came over him that they were all of a kind. They might have been members of a single body.

"Sheep," Dad muttered to himself. Think alike, act alike. Whether it's lynching a man or swallowing booze. Wax! Get 'em hot enough and you can shape 'em any way you please."

"These were his thoughts as he stared down into the hall and I mention them because they bear on what follows. The comparison to wax sent Dad's eyes to a colored poster tacked in the wall of the stair. It went something like this. Dad said:

GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH
PROFESSOR DRYDEN, POPPER'S
WAXWORK WONDER
Direct from Two-Year Run in

"Dad took a chair and rolled a cigarette. He said he felt that they had been waiting for him to tell himself there the cast was complete.

"Lundy rattled the poker chips and said something about Dad always having been a lucky holler."

"Mac an' Rich is havin' a little poker," he said.

"Yeah. They plays a pretty stiff game. Lundy went on. But yuh ain't no touch yuhself, Ten-to-One."

"Dad acknowledged the compliment and Lundy remarked that he was partial to a stiff game himself. "Mac an' Rich is fair itchin' for a game," he went on.

"Rich is right," Richey and MacCoy supported him.

"Dad drew on his cigarette. "There's plenty of easy money downstairs," he said.

"Lundy leaned nearer. "Yuh've got the reputation uh bein' the saintliest hummer as ever come into the Skull, Ten-to-One. Don't it seem as if a couple uh high fliers like you an' me ought to git together?"

"Dad didn't think so just then. He'd come to talk about his brother. That evidence against him, Lundy said there wasn't any hurt."

"Yuh'll show it to me now," Dad shouted suddenly.

"Lundy drew back. "Scared?" he laughed.

"MacCoy said it looked that way, and Richey guessed Dad had never sat in a real game. Lundy laughed. "At that they began to grin and chuckle and Dad knew what that 'something else' in Lundy's mind was now. Dad said he'd never heard of anything quite so damnable.

It is important to eat a variety of healthful foods every day. It is equally important to have them prepared in a way that appeals to your appetite. A sprinkling of sugar adds to the deliciousness of most foods. Most foods are more delicious and nourishing with sugar.

"Professor Dryden Pope had left without paying his bill and Lundy had confiscated the show. You'll get the significance of that presently.

"Several of the alcoves and some of the rooms were occupied, but the alcove in the northwest corner of the gallery was empty, and Dad went towards it. This alcove was always empty, for the reason that a door in the north wall, close to the corner, led into Lundy's office, or 'sneer' room. Of course it wasn't a 'secret room, except in so far that the door when it was closed wasn't visible to the casual observer.

Everybody familiar with the resort knew it was there. The door was set in the partition which ran across the north end of the building, and it extended from the floor to the ceiling. When the door was closed you hardly knew it was there.

"Dad went to the door. It was ajar. Lundy and the two gamblers, Richey and MacCoy, were sitting at a round table. Richey was a tall, thin man with a yellow face. MacCoy was much shorter and heavy-

Peterson saw Lundy's ghastly proposal coming—it staggered him.

"And then he got the other side of the picture. He knew what Lundy was after. The proposition was ghastly, but nothing else had presented itself, or seemed likely to. And Jerry was waiting for him . . . a rope ahead . . . Jerry, his old brother! And it was he who had brought him here!" (Copyright, 1929, Wm. Morrow Co.)

What is Lundy's ghastly proposition? Can Peterson win his brother's freedom? Continue the
