Ashland Art School Making Progress

(Contributed)

In "Costume Illustration and Appropriate Dress Design," as well as "Appreciation of Color," through the study of the history of painting, we have Miss Marguerite Hansen, art instructor for the past six years of the State Teachers college, Buffalo, N. Y.

In costume illustration, a study of the prime requisite of dress design, i. e., the art principles involved in front view design, the harmonization of the design with the type person who will wear it, and the background against which it will be seen are taken into consideration.

The technique of costume illustration and drawing of the human figure and face are also given attention.

Mrs. Hansen has a studio in "color" in the study of "Art Appreciation," the most important of the three elements of design, will be studied in a chronological order from early paintings to the paintings of the present day, with a view to presenting the means of color theory and centuries used to meet their color problems. Laboratory problems will develop color acquaintances and the study of color contrasts and harmonies.

This work is being done at the present time by Miss Hansen and going along nicely.

Miss Hansen's experience and instruction as a graduate of Girls' High school, Brooklyn; Pratt Institute Normal Art and Columbia university, receiving both B. S. and M. A. degrees, enable her to bring to the pupils of Ashland Art school a message that would rarely be available to people this side of the Mississippi river.

Miss Hansen has a joyful, clear way of presenting her problems that makes the work very interesting.

The "Color Course" is along the same line as that taught last year by Miss Margaret Louisa Murphy, but so different that one can have a new study and appreciate the work with Miss Hansen.

The Dress Design course is some thing never before given here and a course of which every woman interested in appropriately gowning herself (and who isn't?) should not fail to take advantage.

Through the study of the face and figure Miss Hansen leads up to appropriate design for the individual and helps solve their problems.

A very wonderful instruction is being given in Mr. Brenneiser's commercial art class in which fifteen or more students are enrolled. In Pictorial Illustration, which is really an advanced course in commercial art and correlates with the aforementioned course, the pupils are getting many helpful ideas.

Mr. Brenneiser has a knack of making his students so enjoy their work that the three hour lesson goes by all too quickly.

W. Ray Panton and his classes in both "Design" and crafts are also doing very satisfactory work. Especially do the "crafts" people enjoy the tooling leather and Gesso problems.

Miss Belle Cady White is already getting some creditable things done in "Landscape" and "Still Life."

It is very difficult to obtain in all the eastern states, instruction in water color and oils, etc., in any way equal to that given by Miss White.

The pupils registered to date in the Ashland School of Art are Miss Hope Mayfield of Nampa, Idaho, Miss Emma Stone of Sny, Wash., Hally Johnson of Month, Oregon, Margaret Gossage of Medford, Jean McClain of Coville, Calif., Edna Braum of St. Louis.

This lady from "Lindy's town" is a teacher in the St. Louis high schools, a graduate of Pratt Art Institute who as first vice president of the National Convention of Women's Overseas World War Service, started here for some post graduate work with these teachers from accredited art schools.

Mrs. Braun was a delegate to this National Women's convention, is a member of the American Legion and a delightful person to meet.

Miss Margaret Osburn, Portland, is a teacher of art in the Girls' Polytechnic school of that place. Miss Esther Miller of Medford, Mrs. Bertha Barnum of Medford, Walter Young of Medford, Mrs. Vivian Neuman Barto of Medford, Esther Spencer, Ashland, a charter member who has attended the Ashland Art school each summer for six years. Miss Spencer will attend art school in San Francisco this coming year.

Gertrude A. Brown, Ashland, Robert Carter, Talent, Ore., Mary Powell, Ashland, Gertrude Stiles, Ashland, Frank Scott, Ashland, Lawrence Powell, Ashland, Miss Laura Kiser, teacher from Vernonia, Ore., Frances McCoy, Ashland, Mildred Millon, Ashland, Florence Allen, Ashland, Loraine Sparr, Marie Davies, Evangeline Foley, all of Ashland.

Mrs. Don Newbury, Medford, Miss Helen Carter, Medford, Ruth Blinzer, daughter of Sheriff Blinzer of Astoria, Ore., Elizabeth and Maria Brenneiser, California, Ira Hart, Talent, and Miss Nellie Koler of Yreka, Cal.

It is not too late to enter for one or more courses and any one wishing further information, call 164-L.

As no one apparently has ever written a piece of music to an earwig, other insects and small animals are apt to come into prominence via the microphone, as a near approach to the one using in operation of the California Oregon Prose company playlet.

"The Song of the Flea," "The Glowworm," "The Pollywog Crawl" and numerous others, were among the suggestions phoned in, in the way of appropriate music to be used with the play.

MRS. GORE'S CLASS PORTLAND GIRLS IN OPEN MEETING TRAPPED BY SEA, RECOUNT HORROR

ASTORIA, Ore., July 20.—Crouched on a tiny shelf of rock on a 500-foot cliff that extends above the sands of the "Death Trap" on Tillamook Head, three Portland girls, Helen Shear, Martha Farlin and Helen Tenra, all 20, spent a night of horror last night, while the Pacific ocean lashed by a summer storm, battered and tore at their feet.

"We had no thought of danger when we started out yesterday afternoon for a hike around Tillamook Head," Miss Farrah, 19, said. "We had planned to walk around the head by way of the beach and as the tide was low we had no thought of danger. I was wearing my bathing suit and Helen and Elizabeth were just wearing summer dresses.

"We just walked along and did not notice anything in particular about the tide until 4 o'clock when we decided to return. Then we noticed we were in a small cove but there was plenty of sand and we did not think of danger until we reached the seaside point of the cove only to find the water breaking furiously against it.

"We started back and then it seemed that the tide rushed in all at once. We were driven right to the base of the big rocky cliff. We were frightened then, but started to climb the loose rock. After a time we reached a kind of ledge where the rock seemed solid and we decided to stay there. It began to rain and snow dark and the tide just seemed to be jumping after us.

"The storm grew worse. We were soaked through and awfully cold and the worst of it all was wondering whether or not we were high enough above the water or whether the next minute a big wave would come along and wash us off. The water kept climbing and climbing after us and in addition to the rain we were soaked with the spray of the waves.

"Minutes wore along like years," Miss Farrah continued. "We could hardly move and were stiff and cramped. Once Helen slipped and almost fell off the ledge into the water. I managed to catch her and we hugged her back. After that we hardly moved. Then it began to thunder and lightning just about the time the water came closest to us. It seemed as if we were certain to be drowned but finally it seemed as if the water had stopped coming on.

"We just huddled together to keep warm as we waited. It seemed ages and ages before we could see the sky turning from black to gray. The water began to go down. Just as soon as we could see the sand we climbed down. We were awfully tired and wet and cold. Then we waited and waited until the water had gone back from the point and started toward Seaside. We were certainly glad to see the people coming after us," she concluded.

SCHOOL BOARD'S BANS AND RULES ROIL PEDAGOGUES

CHICAGO, (AP)—The right of school boards to prescribe a curriculum for teachers, determining the length of their shifts, ban cigarettes, bridge and dancing, will be assailed lastly at the convention of the American federation of teachers in Chicago, July 1-6.

Delegates likewise will attack the policy of school trustees to separate women from the payroll when they acquire a wedding ring.

"It certainly is a joke that women employed in the very profession that seeks to dispel ignorance, prejudice and raise life standards should need emancipating," observed Mrs. Florence Curtis, a member of Chicago national executive secretary, "but they certainly do."

"Members of commerce don't prattle that marriage lessens the skill stenographer's proficiency when she is 'Mrs.' instead of 'Miss.' Why then the attitude that matrimony decreases a woman's value as a teacher?"

Many of this year's resolutions will deal with the principles of "academic freedom," an outgrowth of the query, "Are teachers people?" propounded by the federation.

These resolutions will tell the world and school boards that a teacher ought to be permitted to stay up as late as she likes, write fan letters to movie heroes, wear unfastened galoshes and get married if she wants to.

Mrs. Hanson said it is expected that the Brookwood Labor college of Kenosha, N. Y., which was denounced by the American Federation of Labor as a radical school spreading communist propaganda, will be discussed. Teachers at the Brookwood college are members of the teachers' federation, and the federation is a member of the American Federation of Labor.

ANCIENT SPOKANE PAPER IS FOUND

A piece of old newspaper, which had been found in the back of a picture was brought into the Mail Tribune office yesterday by R. P. Elson. The paper was dated June 21, 1891, and was from the Sunday morning edition of the Spokane Review.

"Sovient Spoons" was the title of one article, which told about the "brigading" in Europe and the "East" with a Boston date line, June 14-Special. It was received in Spokane exactly a week after it had been written. Souvenir spoons were said to be the "most popular and sensible of reigning fads."

An interesting story from the Chicago Tribune was reprinted in the Spokane Review, and an edit told how much better foreign newspapers were than those printed in America. The reason given for this statement was that London Geographic had printed a full page on snakes, which showed they were further advanced. The London Geographic was a "highly esteemed and illustrated" document.

A complete column was devoted to life in Paris, and told briefly of the record of the fire department, the barber's strike, who attended royal gatherings, and how they were dressed.

Railroad rates from Coner d'Alon to Spokane round trip were listed as $2.25, as compared with $3.22 now.
