DOLORES PROVES CAPABILITIES IN 'GLAD RAG DOLL'

If Hunt's Craterian theater is not filled the remainder of this week with exceptionally well pleased audiences to witness the performances of "The Glad Rag Doll," which opened yesterday, it will be because the cleverness, fetching humor and general excellence of this talking film play, a cross between a musical comedy and a domestic farce, that is sprinkled with chuckles and hearty laughs from start to finish, is not generally known.

Dolores Costello.

While pulchritudinous Dolores Costello is the scintillating star and so dominates the production that at first thought one is inclined to think that in professional stage parlance she is the whole show, second thought reveals that she is surrounded by prominent film players of class—a number of them featured comedians or comediennes of good films seen in the past.

This brings out all the more pronounced her ability as an all around very capable actress.

You see a different Dolores Costello in "The Glad Rag Doll" from her past characterizations, this time posing as a clever, apparently hard-boiled New York chorus girl, and yet without sacrificing any of her charm and beauty. You would never have suspected from seeing her in previous pictures that she is a comedienne of par excellence, but you realize this with a relish when you see her in "The Glad Rag Doll."

She wears the most fashionable gowns—in fact much of this laugh-producing and well acted, but seemingly impossible, film is in a way a fashion show, as the locale for most of its is the interior of a Philadelphia society home, with the story revolving around the young men of this family of aristocratic snobbery falling in love with the irrepressible but always lovable chorus girl, who finally becomes the bride of the male head of the family, after many obstacles had been surmounted.

The cast of Miss Costello's support makes your mouth water with its deliciousness—Albert Gran, the handsome fat man with the winning smile; Claude Gillingwater, Dale Fuller, Lee Moran, Stanley Taylor, Maud Turner Gordon, Tom Ricketts, Douglas Girrard, Andre Beranger and others.

And one of the others, whose name or identity is not known to this reviewer, but who made a distinct hit, second only to Miss Costello, is the buxom, good-looking colored woman who played a bit as the maid of the chorus girl.

The synchronized musical accompaniment matches the worth of the film as a mirth entertainment with settings of charm. Of course there is a theme song, "The Glad Rag Doll," but that need not scare you. It is good.

One of the short talking subjects, "The Book Lovers," with its costumes, dances and songs, is unusually good. R. A. K.

ENROLLMENT FOR ASHLAND NORMAL HAS HIGH RECORD

ASHLAND, Ore., Aug. 1.—(Spl.) A new enrollment record for the Southern Oregon Normal summer session was set Tuesday when the list ran to 400. There are 239 of the number enrolled for the second six weeks session, and 25 of them are new enrollments for the second half of the summer term.

Miss Ellen Waters and Miss Margaret Arnold, former Ashland teachers, when driving to Ashland on Monday from the northern end of the state to serve in the Camp-fire Girls' summer camp, discovered about two miles south of Roseurg a burning farm home. The owners were absent at the time, so the two young women sent out a general alarm over the countryside and gave assistance in carrying out the household effects. The house was an entire loss.

At their noon luncheon on Tuesday the members of the Kiwanis club were entertained by talks given by Dr. R. L. Burdic and B. Fitzgerald. Dr. Burdic lately returned from the reserve officers' camp at Fort Lewis, Washington. He told of many interesting things added to the equipment of the camp since the years of the war.

Mr. Fitzgerald gave a most interesting summary of the resources and possibilities of the Crescent City country. He called attention to the recent reduction in freight rates from Crescent City points.

The Kiwanians voted their support to the Ashland summer art school which must have a greater attendance next year if the school is to continue.

The club was a bit nervous over the absence of City Engineer Frank Walker, who was away for the first time in over three years, but were reassured when they found that he had maintained his perfect attendance by attending at Medford.
