ARMY WILL FIGHT BATTLE ON FLAMES

War Department Orders Ninth Corps To Furnish Assistance In Chelan Forest Fire—High Winds, Low Humidity Add To Toll In Three States—Rain Is Only Hope.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—(AP)—The commanding general of the ninth corps area at San Francisco was ordered today by the war department to "furnish such assistance as possible" to the district forester at Portland, Oregon, in fighting the fire-raging in the Chelan national forest, Washington.

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 15.—(AP)—Fanned by high winds and encouraged by low humidity, forest fires in eastern Washington, Idaho and Montana were adding more today to the already heavy toll of blackened stumps. In British Columbia the flames in Kootenai forest claimed their first life. Ludwig Karnat, seriously crushed about the head by a falling tree while fighting a forest fire at Fernon, died in a Nelson, B. C., hospital.

The fires were scornful of both natural and artificial barriers, leaping a river in Idaho to roar deeper into the forest and sweeping over backfires in Washington forests as if they had not been built.

Rain was believed to be the only solution for some of the fires after the efforts of hundreds of men to beat back the flames had failed.

Residents in the Chelan district, despairing of conquering the fires with only local aid, telegraphed Senator C. C. Dill for federal troops but he advised them the forest service must first request such help. Every man in northern Chelan county was drafted to fight a 12,000-acre fire.

The Sherman creek fire in the Colville national forest was raging in 30,000 acres of yellow pine. Airplane observers said the canyons were infernos of flame and smoke.

Aided by heavy winds the Bald mountain fire in the Selway forest of Idaho jumped across the Lochsa river on a quarter mile front and was approaching the Clearwater forest boundary. The fire covers 8,000 acres.

The Nez Perce forest was threatened by a fire in the Bitter Root reserve in Montana, which had crept six miles on a two mile front in a week. The Old Man creek fire, also in the Selway forest, was raging through heavy timber propelled by winds.
