WILL TAP SEA FOR FOOD WHEN FOOD RUNS LOW

WASHINGTON (AP) — Science, looking forward to a day of overpopulation and depleted food resources, is turning to the sea for future exploitation.

Progressive experiments of the bureau of fisheries are demonstrating the value of foods of marine animal origin, indirectly or immediately, for human consumption.

Whether man eats marine life or lives on animals that feed on fishery products, the benefits will be as great, according to studies of John R. Manning, associate technologist.

"Take milk, for instance," he said. "It has been shown thru numerous biological analyses by various scientific investigators that cow's milk under ordinary conditions is deficient in such dietary necessities as vitamins C, D and E, iron and iodine.

"Biochemists have established that it is possible to increase not only the vitamin content, but that of calcium, iodine and iron by including in the rations such marine foods that contain the deficient minerals. An analysis of milk given by cows fed fish meal showed that the iodine content alone increased between 10 and 15 times."

Crab scrap, a by-product made from non-edible waste of the crab industry, has been found to be an excellent poultry food, he said. In preliminary feeding tests, scrap included in a month's ration doubled egg production.

A vast program of cooperative feeding tests in collaboration with various bureaus and agencies of the department of agriculture, state experiment stations, and universities, has been outlined to determine the nutritive value of feeds of marine animal origin.

Besides tests of various fish meals for their potency, mineral content, and vitamin supplies, research will be conducted on the source of organic iodine, shrimp bran, and the nutritive properties of fish liver oils.

"We expect to get flattering results," Manning said. "Sea water contains at least 34 elements useful to life."

BUENOS AIRES TO WAFT MELODIES BY RADIO VERY SOON

WASHINGTON (AP)—Radio fans with a flair for fine music and distance enthusiasts in Terre Haute, Topeka or Walla Walla will be tumbling in, probably within a year, on a broadcast delicacy something like this:

"This is station——" in Buenos Aires, the Paris of the western hemisphere, sending you a concert by the world famous chorus of the Colon opera house."

For the plan of the Pan-American union for an international exchange of goodwill programs between the United States and South America is being accorded spontaneous approval by broadcasters and musicians in Latin America countries, says Franklin P. Adams, counselor of the union. Cuba, as well as the South American republics, is interested in the project and probably will participate.

Concerts given in the Pan-American union building here by Latin-American artists and the army and navy bands will be sent on short waves for South American listeners.

It is hoped eventually to have all of the 21 South American republics participating in the exchange of programs.

Engineers say that conditions are ideal for transmission between the two countries.

SOUTH CAROLINA BOASTS OF PRODUCTS WITH IODINE

COLUMBIA, S. C. (AP)—South Carolina wants the country to know that there is no need to take separate doses of iodine to prevent goiter.

A campaign is on, sponsored by the recently created South Carolina Natural Resources commission, to tell the world that food grown in palmetto state soil contains enough iodine to meet medical requirements in combating goiter. All vegetables, fruit and milk, are included in the iodine edibles.

Thirty tourists cooled themselves with approximately 10,000 tons of ice on American railroads this summer.

KENTUCKY PAIR WAITING GALLOWS ADORN A SERMON

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP)—Once a week the silent men and women expiating their crimes against society in Kentucky penal institutions hear a practical lesson in the folly of law violation.

In every penal institution and jail in the state they hear the story of two men who transgressed the law against murder and soon will pay the penalty the state exacts by forfeiting their lives.

It is not because of any interest in the brutal crimes but execution of a method conceived by Governor Sampson to impress law violators through concrete evidence, that crime does not pay.

It is his proclamation, read to the prisoners each week through which the story of the two convicted murderers is unfolded and will be repeated until the two [illegible] die in the electric chair at the state prison September 13.

In his proclamation, the governor says: "May this lesson be deeply engraven upon the hearts and minds of the criminally inclined, that they may not forget it. Virtue must be regarded for its priceless worth. It is deplorable that men living in the greatest country should violate the rules of society and make it necessary to pay the extreme penalty and die an ignominious death on the gallows or in the electric chair. Respect for, and obedience to all laws is essential to peace, prosperity and happiness. The rules of society must be observed, the laws of our land must be obeyed. The citizens who are criminally inclined must learn to respect both the rules of society and our laws."

Carl Hord, one of the condemned, killed Marion A. George, a Louisville merchant in a robbery December 13, 1928. Charles Mitra of St. Louis, an accomplice, already has been executed.

Ivan Hutsell, the other man awaiting execution was convicted at Lagrange of the slaying May 19, 1927, of Mrs. John Ditchler. He killed the woman and her husband in revenge because the former aided his conviction in an Indiana case which caused his imprisonment.

COMING VIRGINIA PRIMARY TEST OF G. O. P. STRENGTH

RICHMOND, Va.—(AP)—The battleground of two mighty armies a half-century ago, Virginia has become the battlefield for two major political parties. The nation looks to see whether the Republican victory in the Smith-Hoover campaign presages the advent of two-party government in this cornerstone of the "solid south."

The governor's office, occupied by a Democrat since the days of reconstruction, is the goal of both factions.

Republicans, barred from participation in the affairs of the state government by a terrirage of Democratic votes, have allied themselves with the anti-Smith Democrats who broke away from the party in 1928 and have thrown their support to Dr. William Moseley Brown, gubernatorial nominee of the anti-Smith Democrats.

Ushered into the campaign on the crest of one of the largest pluralities ever given a Democrat in the party primary, Dr. John Garland Pollard, former professor of constitutional law at the College of William and Mary, heads the Democratic forces as the nominee for governor.

Dr. Pollard actively supported Alfred E. Smith last year and is regarded as among the democratic leaders in Virginia that the anti-Smith Democrats have urged their adherents to repudiate.

Dr. Brown, the anti-Smith and Republican nominee, made his debut into politics by receiving the nomination of the two political conventions within eight days. He hastened to resign a professorship at Washington and Lee university to answer what he called a clarion call to duty.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., who has termed the campaign an election on the prohibition issue, urged anti-Smith Democrats to stay out of the Democratic primary and continue opposition to the democratic leaders who supported Smith and what he terms "Raskobism."

In a message to the anti-Smith convention, Bishop Cannon called the principal issue "Raskobism vs. Southern Democracy," and Dr. Brown has made an attack on "Raskobism" the theme of several of his early campaign addresses, which were begun before the Democratic primary August 6.

The anti-Smith-Republican coalition is warring upon the "short ballot" amendment to the state constitution, a part of the reorganization scheme of Gov. Harry Flood Byrd under which three elective state officers were to be appointed by the executive.

The "short ballot" was the principal point of difference among the Democratic candidates for governor in the primary and was defended by Dr. Pollard, a staunch supporter of the Byrd program and regarded as the administration candidate. His primary plurality trebled the vote of two opponents, G. Walter Mapp and Roswell Page.

ALGIERS, Algeria, Aug. 31—(AP)—An unknown number of persons were buried early today in the crash of an old building on the water front, some estimates placing the number of victims between 50 and 70.
