Death Treasure

By R. A. J. WALLING

SYNOPSIS: The mysterious black bag yields its contents. Wrapped in a prison shirt is a bundle of money—gold—precious and priceless gold. Tom Grenofen leaves the bag and returns to his home. Somerfield has made another discovery under the pile of jewelry—the much-sought-after history stolen from the Fotherbury library. While they suggest little clues for finding the treasure, they see several policemen approaching the house. Somerfield has a large camera case, thrusts the lens into the door and waits in the front door with Grenofen. Just as the chief officer reaches the door, Somerfield calmly leaves with the camera case under his arm—the treasure chest is left behind.

Chapter 23 A WARRANT

The officer and I were in my studio when I handed back a paper to the man. Somerfield having carried off his bluff, my pulse was quieter, and I looked at him quite calmly.

The paper he had given me to read was a search warrant which asserted that "information on oath hath this day been laid before me that certain goods have lately been feloniously stolen and carried away out of the dwelling house of Bertram Fotherbury and that this informant hath probable cause to suspect that the said goods are concealed in the house of Thomas Grenofen of Woodcot."

Wherefore it authorized and commanded Stephen Hallett, with proper assistance, to enter the house of Thomas Grenofen in the daytime and there diligently search for the said goods, and if the same should be found upon such search to bring the goods so found and also the body of the said Thomas Grenofen before His Majesty's Justice of the Peace.

"What an extraordinary thing!" said I. "What's it all about? It's hardly pleasant to have one's house under suspicion. I hope you'll be careful not to annoy my mother and to give the servants as little cause for gossip as possible. Otherwise you're quite at liberty to look anywhere you like for anything."

"Liberty," said he. "I don't want to annoy anybody. But you'll collect all the inmates of the house in one room, please."

His manner was unpleasant. "I don't know that I'll do anything of the sort," said I. "You can collect them yourself if they'll come. If you are a police officer you ought to know how to behave in another man's house. You can get on with the job. But handle my pictures carefully. I'll go and tell my mother the house is being searched."

"You'll stay here," said he. "I'll be hanged if I do! Does your warrant entitle you to order me about?"

But the door opened and my mother came in.

"Hullo, Tom," said she. "Good gracious, another! What are all these men doing about the place?"

"Men!" I cried. "Has he brought an army? Have they been annoying you?"

"Oh, dear, no!—merely amusing me. I was going out to the garden when a man said I couldn't go that way. He said he was a police officer. I went out by the front door and there was another who said I couldn't go that way. So I thought I'd come and see you. What's it all about?"

"Heaven knows," said I. "Some outrageous official folly. This person has a search warrant. You, sir, will you kindly do your job as quickly as possible and leave? Mother, you'd better stay here with me. He wants the cook and Mills in the same room. Do you mind?"

"No, of course."

My mother had come to my side and taken my arm. She squeezed it hard and I saw that she was looking at the safe. I gathered her under my arm to reassure her.

"If you touch that bell," said I to the police officer, "I will tell the cook and the maid to come here."

He pressed the button.

"You just missed Somerfield, mother," I said. "He's going to London this afternoon and down to Oxford tomorrow. Going to take that photograph I wanted of Tom Tower."

SPOKANE CITIZEN GAINS 10 POUNDS; FEELS LIKE NEW

"Before I started this wonderful Sargon I was rundown, losing weight all the time and suffered a lot with my stomach. I was nervous, my food didn't agree with me, I didn't sleep well and I was constipated and bilious."

"I tried different medicines and tonics that friends would suggest, but I didn't get any lasting benefits from any of them. Then I started Sargon. I have taken 2 bottles, and honestly, it has done more for me than all the rest of them put together. Now I eat a good square meal any time I want it, digest it fine, and don't have a bit of stomach trouble of any kind. I sleep good, and I never saw such medicine for building up a run-down system. I have gained ten pounds, and I feel at least twenty years younger."

"Sargon Pills are everything that came to make a real laxative. I wish I was in position to tell every sufferer what this treatment has done for me."

The above statement was recently made by John A. Gardner of W. 1195 Third Ave., Spokane, for the past twenty-six years linotype operator for the Spokesman-Review.

Sargon may be obtained in Medford at Magill's Drug Store.

Is your child undernourished?

Surprising results disclosed by New York survey

A SURVEY of one million school children conducted by the Department of Health of the city of New York, disclosed that 20% of the children were seriously undernourished and in need of a physician's care. More than 60% were reported "on the border line" of malnutrition. Only a trifle more than 17% were found to be normal. This survey was not limited to the so-called poorer classes. It was representative of the entire city. It indicated that four children out of every five are in immediate need of a more carefully selected diet.

Mothers should see that their children eat sufficiently of milk, fruit and vegetable foods. The important step is to make these foods so enjoyable that children will eat them.

Authorities recommend a little sugar used judiciously to assist mothers in making foods appetizing. A small sprinkling of sugar on cereals, as one eminent food scientist phrases it, takes the "fight" out of eating cereal. Citrus and other fresh fruits, berries, stewed fruits, are made more appetizing by a dash of sugar. Wise mothers make junkets, blanc-manges, custards, and other milk desserts to encourage the eating of milk.

Note this: If you want to improve the taste of healthful vegetables just add a dash of sugar to them while they are cooking (preferably in little water). Try it and you will be amazed how much more tasteful the vegetables become. Candy, ice cream and cookies are recommended for dessert. A bit of sweet makes
