MANUFACTURERS OREGON DECREASE REPORTS SPEAKER

Oregon shows a $9,000,000 decline in manufactured output according to statistics gathered for the two years between 1925 and 1927, while the states on both sides of her show tremendous increases, according to Edwin Bates of the United States department of commerce who spoke before the Rotary club this noon.

Mr. Bates, who is in charge of a Pacific northwest commercial survey, said that the manufactured output of the state of California during the same two years shows an increase of 150 million dollars and that of Washington, 15 million.

The survey now being conducted by the department of commerce will give a comprehensive picture of the climatic conditions, industries and situations that will aid sales managers in the various districts, and preclude much of the wasted effort now so prevalent.

That the western territory has all the variations present in the whole of the United States and therefore presents the biggest problem of any section, was another statement made by the speaker.

"In this western territory we find sections with the heaviest rainfall and sections with the lightest rainfall in the United States. We find sections with the most hours of sunshine, and those with the fewest equable climatic hours. We find the most equable climate—down around San Diego, and the most variable—around Miles City," he said.

The cost of distribution is another subject being studied carefully, and with the facts before the department of commerce, manufacturers will be provided with the data which will be a great help to them.

Rich Grey, who recently returned from a trip to the South Sea Islands and Australia, entertained the club with a brief resume of the voyage and the various points he visited. He also passed around a number of interesting trophies and souvenirs he collected along the way, including weapons of warfare, beads, tapa cloth and other colorful objects.
