Perfect Vision—Most Valued Possession

Eyesight is unquestionably the most important of the five special senses and one of the most highly prized by the great majority of human beings.

What greater calamity can befall one than complete loss of vision, how pathetic, even for the observer are the sightless days for those who have previously delighted in occupations that depend upon their eyes; think how terrible is blindness to one who has loved books and who has derived his chief pleasure in life from reading. To be deprived of the enjoyment of art, to be shut out from observation of all of the beauties of nature, can anything more depressing be imagined? If one pauses to consider these things, the appreciation of good sight is immeasurably enhanced.

If then we fully realize the fact that perfect vision is one of our most valuable possessions, it would seem well that every one should have an examination of this important organ—the eye—at least twice a year.

This examination should always be made by a competent Optometrist to determine the fitness of this important organ. Years of scientific study is the valuable service rendered the patient who consults the competent Optometrist.

MEDFORD PEARS COST 5 CENTS IN GOTHAM SAYS MRS. McDONALD

A letter received a short time ago from Mr. and Mrs. John E. McDonald, en route from Medford to Africa, by J. R. Spurgeon of this city gives interesting information of a portion of their trip across the United States.

The letter, in part, is as follows: "Here we are at last in little New York, but it isn't very little to me, but it's not at all a hard place in which to find your way. We stayed two days in Richmond, two in San Jose and a week in Los Angeles, where it was, Oh! so hot. At San Antonio, Texas, it was pretty hot, again and so on to Mobile, Miss. The folks met us at Mobile and made our stay there very pleasant, but I would not live there for the whole city, hardly."

"We had a great ride along the Gulf of Mexico, the road running close to the water for about 40 miles and across the road, fine old southern mansions. Oh, yes, we saw two huge, fat old alligators lying in the sun, down in one of the old Mississippi bayous. The trip from Mobile to Washington is not especially interesting. Just the same going over and over of course, Atlanta is the New York of the south, having over 300,000 population and a busy city. It was cotton picking time in Mobile and a never-ending stream of negroes were in the field with huge baskets on their heads, but very little to speak of on the rest of their body."

"Since making this trip we are more in love with Oregon than ever, if that were possible. Fruit is so expensive everywhere. Pears here are five cents apiece. Arriving in Washington early Sunday, who should meet us at the depot but our old Medford friends, Lawyer and Mrs. Borden. They had their car and driver and certainly gave us the most wonderful day holidays, and not much chance to see the city. Our boat calls soon and in a few hours we will be on the ocean brine."

Phyllis Haver at Isis Tonight

An innovation in the custom of employing music to assist in creating the proper atmosphere was introduced by Director Howard Hixen during the making of "Sai of Singapore." Phyllis Haver's star picture at the Isis theatre for the last nights tonight.

Almost the entire action of the picture takes place aboard an ocean freighter. Hence it was desirable to mould the moods and thoughts of the principal actors into those of veteran seamen. To this end a male quartet was secured and during much of the latter action they sang typical sailor's chortles, many of them old sea songs now little known.
