

M'DONALD REGRETS TO LEAVE N.Y.

British Premier and Daughter Given Great Send-Off On Journey to Canada—Leaves With Deep Regret Is Final Word to Reporters—Official Farewell in Buffalo.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—(AP)—Premier P. Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain bade New York adieu today and departed on a special train over the New York Central railroad, en route to Canada, where he will confer personally with Premier MacKenzie King.

Refreshed somewhat from his two days of comparative rest, following his arduous official visits in Washington and New York, the British premier and his daughter, Miss Ishbel, were driven to the Grand Central terminal from their hotel, to be greeted by a large crowd. A squad of motorcycle police, sirens screeching, formed an escort.

They faced the inevitable battery of cameramen and smilingly posed for pictures while spectators applauded. Soon afterwards the premier and his party boarded their train, which pulled out of the terminal at 8:30 o'clock.

The train is due at Buffalo shortly after 5 o'clock this afternoon. After viewing Niagara Falls, tomorrow the premier will cross the international bridge and then go by special train to Toronto, where he will greet Canada's premier.

To Issue Statement.

A statement bearing on the recent negotiations for a better understanding between Great Britain and the United States is expected later in the week, but the nature of it has been carefully guarded.

When the premier and his daughter arrived at the station, they were greeted by Sir Harry Armstrong, British consul general, and Lady Armstrong, who presented the members of the British consulate and their wives to the prime minister and his daughter.

Mr. MacDonald wore a suit of brown tweed, while Miss Ishbel was costumed in a traveling suit of black hasha topped by a red velvet hat.

Just before the train pulled out of the station, Sir Harry Armstrong led the crowd in a vociferous demonstration for the prime minister.

The train, which was decorated with British and American flags and chrysanthemums, was made up chiefly of private cars belonging to the railroad officials.

A double file of 200 policemen formed a line from the Vanderbilt avenue entrance of the terminal to the train, through which the premier and his party passed. "I leave New York with regrets—great regrets," the premier told reporters just before boarding the train. He said that he expected to give his farewell message to America after his arrival at Buffalo.

Explorer Makes First Crossing of Equatorial Africa

It took nearly a year for Paul L. Hoeffler, American explorer, to accomplish the first crossing of equatorial Africa from The Indian to the Atlantic ocean. The expedition traveled more than 12,000 miles through swamp mud and burning sand, over temporary corduroy roads and across fitness native footbridges, but Hoeffler said that at no time was any trouble of any kind experienced with the eight General Cord tires on the two trucks and that none of the four spare General tires was ever used.

The Drug and Dope Addiction Situation in Southern Oregon

The Mail Tribune is glad to print an article on the Drug Evil in this section, by Dr. A. A. Soule of Klamath Falls, a physician of high standing in that city who was acquitted on the charge of violating the Harrison Narcotic Act, at the recent session of the federal court in this city. This is the first installment and will be followed by another. We believe that the more the problem is discussed and all phases considered, the better for everyone concerned.

Pharisee or Samaritan

By Dr. A. A. Soule

Pharisee or Samaritan is a question that arises in our minds when we think of the Harrison Narcotic Law. This law, or act, was passed by congress in pursuance to an agreement made at The Hague conference of nations in 1912. It became a law March, 1915, in the guise of a tax measure but with a moral end in view. Medical men helped in framing it, and its purpose was to direct the administration, prescribing and dispensing of narcotic drugs to and through legitimate channels.

My review of this act is to point out a few of the inconsistencies and inadequacies of the act itself and to mention the failure of it to stop drug addiction disease from increasing and call attention to the fact that administrators and interpreters of the law, having no medical knowledge, disregard pathology of disease and prosecute medical men, gaining nothing by so doing.

The act intended to stop the underworld traffic in opium and cocaine, but the result of the law as amended, and with the rules and regulations, the advisory pamphlets and letters which are supposed to be advisory only, yet are upheld by the courts as law, have made the whole situation so complicated, that, as Prosecuting Attorney Marsh said, "Lawyers themselves cannot understand it." Legitimate channels are being closed and diseased individuals are driven to the underworld.

In reality it practically regulates the practice of medicine. The last decision of the U. S. supreme court questioned to a slight extent the constitutionality of the act as congress had no intention to interfere with practice of medicine within the states.

Different nations hold different views. In Germany, dealers, importers, etc., are regulated, but as in Canada, compulsory treatment of addicts is the law. In this country, after certain limitations are set out, the doctor is told to treat an addict, if acting in good faith and in his best judgment, such should be done. Administrators of the law tell physicians that they can give no directions or authority or permits to handle a case. The responsibility is up to the doctor.

Where is the necessary authority to meet this stated responsibility? Unfettered action of medical men must see that if responsibilities are thus placed upon us, then as a square deal the needed authority should follow.

The government makes no attempt in this Harrison act to care for or treat opiate addiction disease. These addicts are allowed to be in society, and the physician is told to treat them, but some addicts who are able to care for themselves, take care of their affairs, and in fact are not known by anyone as being addicts until later they become diseased individuals.

The Harrison Narcotic Act deals with registration, stamps, dealers, dentists, veterinarians, surgeons and other matters but I am only touching on the way in which it affects physicians. Doctors may use opium and its derivatives and cocoon leaves in their regular practice. In the course of their professional work where they are personally attending a case they may administer, prescribe, or dispense and no record need be kept. An addict cannot be treated, however, without a record, and then only if he is aged (no age stated) and infirm.

Or an addict may be treated if he has an incurable disease as cancer, tuberculosis and other diseases well recognized as coming under that head. Thirdly, an addict may be treated for any concomitant disease that he may have or in an emergency, if the addict is in a state of exhaustion or collapse is threatened. Fourthly, a physician may treat an addict for opiate addiction disease, if he confines the patient. Lastly a physician may dispense to an addict, if he is satisfied that he is going to a hospital, sanitarium or place to be restrained.

The law, if it is going to permit physicians to treat addicts at all, should (1) Provide for satisfying narcotic addiction disease incident to incurable disease. (2) Make provision for increasing the dosage in incurable disease as the patient's tolerance for the drug increases. (3) Provision for treatment of curable or incurable disease complicated with narcotism or the treatment of narcotic disease complicated with curable or incurable disease.
