

BOY MARKSMEN WOUND MECHANIC

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 15.—(AP)—A rifle bullet, fired by 12-year-old William Harriberger here last night at the chimney of a shack occupied by Fred Rinko, middle-aged mechanic, glanced from the chimney into Rinko's abdomen, causing his death early today.

The youth, with two companions of his own age, Charles and William McDermott, twins, was practicing marksmanship, he said. When the boys saw that Rinko had been wounded they fled to their homes. The man staggered into a nearby grocery, where an ambulance was called. He did not know how he had been shot.

Detectives located the boys at their homes. They were released to their parents after questioning, but juvenile authorities were to take up their case.

New Proprietors Beebe & Kindle Service Station

The Beebe & Kindle service station on North Riverside, opposite the Nat. has been taken over by the Oregon Gasoline Stations, Inc. and William Zundel, who has been in charge of the station at the corner of Main and Fir streets for two years, has been placed in charge.

This company also took over the above station several months ago. A. O. Tofferson, who has been with the Beebe & Kindle station for a year and a half, will be connected with the Sixth Street service station owned by Val Fischer.

This Milk Kept Sweet for Twenty-three Years

In 1906, when rations were being dispensed to the sufferers in San Francisco after the earthquake and fire, Mrs. Eugenia Mengula of that city received a gallon can of Carnation Cream, as it was then called. As it happened not to be needed at the time, Mrs. Mengula preserved it and came to cherish it as a souvenir. Recently she was persuaded to permit it to be opened because of the scientific value of ascertaining the state of its contents. It was formally opened in the presence of the Governor of the State of Washington and the Mayor of Seattle and various scientific authorities and the contents proved to be perfectly sweet and unspoiled. The illustration above shows Mrs. Mengula with the famous can before it was opened.

Box of Boscs Renews Friendship of Local Woman and Wealthy J. D. Ryan

An old-time friendship between Mrs. Alice Guck Trowbridge of Medford and John D. Ryan, billionaire finance baron of New York City, was renewed recently through a box of golden Bosc pears sent by the former from a local packing house. An immediate reply, in the simple, appreciative language of a truly big man was received by the local resident yesterday.

Although J. D. Ryan is often referred to as the "richest man in the world," whose wealth, according to Mrs. Trowbridge, even surpasses that of Henry Ford, he never forgets an old friend, and enjoys nothing better than to return to the haunts of his early youth and the folks who knew him when he was a struggling young man on a salary.

"It was his personality and brains that lifted him to the position he now holds in the world of finance—not pull, nor luck, nor any of the other elements which have helped other powerful men up the ladder," said his local friend.

There came a day when the announcement of the engagement of young John D. Ryan caused quite a stir in the city of Hancock, and receptions and parties for the young couple were in order. No place in the town was more affected by the news than was the dressmaking and millinery establishment of the present Mrs. Trowbridge, which not only had to turn out the reception frocks for the Ryans and their feminine friends, but the trousseau for the bride herself.

In the meantime, John D. Ryan had come out to Butte, Montana, where, according to Mrs. Trowbridge, his clever mind and his lovable personality won him his first success in a large measure. From his activities in the Anaconda Copper Mining company, of which he now is president and holds a controlling interest, he branched out into other mining projects, accumulating fabulous wealth and prestige throughout the country.

He now is interested in rich mines, not only in every section of the United States, but in Africa and other foreign countries.

During the World War, John D. Ryan was appointed director of aircraft production by President Wilson, also chairman of the aircraft board, and second assistant secretary of war. He was a member of the war council, and an active worker and contributor to the Red Cross. He is now 65 years old.

Mrs. Trowbridge knew "John D." when he was a young boy, back in Hancock, Mich. In those days she ran what was considered the largest dressmaking and millinery establishment in the northern part of the state. She had 30 girls in her employ at that time, and her place of business was patronized by the most prominent families in northern Michigan. She designed and made the garments worn by all the women of the Ryan family.

Price of Party and Few Drinks Is Jail, Murder Charge for Chicagoan

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—(AP)—The price John Preston was paying today for a party with two young women companions was in jail and a murder charge against him. One of the young women, Miss Agnes Johnston, 26, was dead. She had been attacked, then strangled.

Preston, who is married, denied knowledge of how Miss Johnston was killed. Two men held them up, he said, and drove away with her.

Miss Johnston's body was found in a clump of bushes not far from the spot where Preston's rented automobile had been abandoned. It was on a little used roadway near West Chicago. The young woman had been severely beaten. Her clothing was torn and her face was cut and swollen. There were fingerprints on her neck. Miss Mathilda Murphy, cousin of Miss Johnston, and her companion on the party, told of events preceding the slaying.

They had gone with Preston, she said, only after much insistence by him, and they became alarmed at his behavior after he had several drinks at a roadhouse.

Upon their demanding that he take them home, all three got into the car. Preston, Miss Murphy said, continued his objectionable manner, and both women leaped from the machine and ran. Miss Murphy escaped, although Preston struck her in the face, she said. When she picked herself up Preston was carrying the struggling Johnston girl to the car and shortly afterward he drove away.

President Walter S. Gifford announced that another "substantial reduction" in toll and long distance rates would be made on January 1.

How Both Ends Of Paint Brush Work

Handle And Bristle Ends Must Cooperate To Give Good Job

Everybody knows that a paint brush is made up of two main parts—the bristles that spread the paint and the handle that the painter grasps. What may not be so apparent is the wisdom of knowing in any painting job just what is going on both the handle end and on the bristle end.

At the bristle end of the brush we have the materials for the work to be done, the white-lead, linseed oil and tinting colors. These must be mixed and tinted to the individual taste and applied in such a manner as to insure a satisfactory and lasting job, and it is in the end of the work that the competent painter proves his worth and in the long run pays for himself.

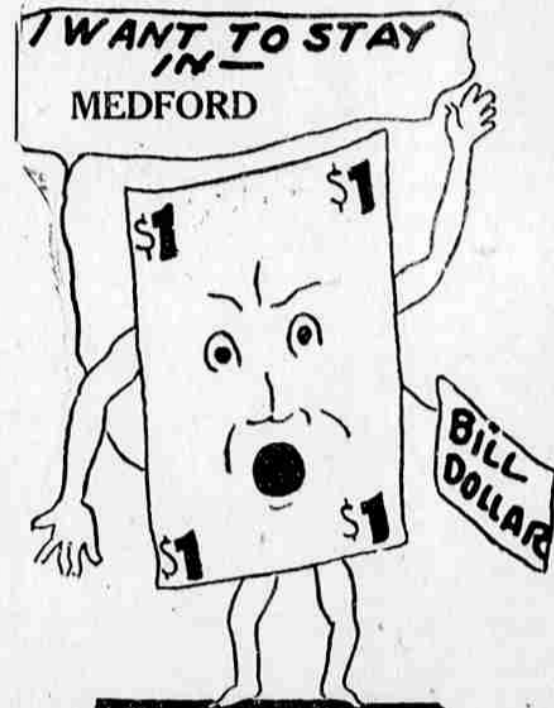

Some people upon deciding to have a room decorated or a house painted think first of how cheaply the job can be done instead of taking into consideration the fact that in the long run the painter who charges a little more and guarantees a perfect job is by far the cheapest painter of all.

Good painters, men of reputation, are forever on the lookout for new ideas in decoration, for means of doing the work so that it will last longer. And although as a result they may charge more they will invariably stand back of the work after it has been done.

Therefore although almost everybody can handle a paint brush after a fashion it is well to bear in mind that a brush has two ends and that to obtain the best results the quality of the materials and the reputation of the painter must both be given first consideration before price enters into the painting plans.
