THE LUXURY HUSBAND

SYNOPSIS: Indignant because Ray had led from the house-party, Barbara is secretly long for his return. One night, she and Henderson are snared in a midnight treasure hunt. The successive clues lead them around the countryside and finally to the ruins of an ancient abbey. Here Henderson suddenly takes Barbara in his arms, vows he loves her and asks that she leave Ray and marry him. Just then a terrifying voice booms out of the eerie darkness—someone has been watching Henderson's love-making—and it is Ray.

Chapter 17
BACK TO AMERICA

HENDERSON'S arm fell from Barbara's shoulders and he turned toward Ray, who was standing a few feet behind them.

"Good Lord, Lowther," Henderson shouted, and Barbara could only gasp in bewilderment.

"Why, Ray—"

A stupid sort of silence, only momentarily; however, for Henderson quickly regained his composure.

"We thought you were in London."

He laughed as he spoke, as though he were trying to pass the situation off as a joke.

But Ray did not appear to enter into the joke.

Ray's voice split the silence—Henderson's arm dropped instinctively.

"It's obvious that you thought I was in town . . ." he began.

"Rot!" Henderson interrupted. "Hang it all, man, there's no need to look so surly about it. We're not living in a dark age, you know."

"Nor in a decent one apparently." But that, Barbara would not stand for.

"How dare you say that, Ray," she flashed at him. "Besides, you're making an absurd fuss out of nothing. We were out on a treasure hunt."

"Our host and myself seem both interested in the same treasure," Ray said caustically.

The Britisher's eyes narrowed and Barbara had begun to be frightened.

Angry as she was with Ray, she did not want a serious quarrel to take place between the two men.

"You're behaving like two school-boys," she told them angrily. "Stop quarrelling and, instead, you might tell me, Ray, what you have been doing these last few days."

"I should prefer to explain that to you when we are alone," he told her coldly.

She looked at him a moment and then started toward the automobiles and, after a perceptible hesitation, the two men fell into step beside her.

"I caught the 10:15 from Waterloo and was fairly late in reaching the house," Ray told her stiffly.

"They informed me that you were out on a treasure hunt, but when all the others had returned I began to worry. I induced the boys to tell me where they had planted the treasure and I thought I'd run over in the car to see if I could locate you."

He paused, ominously, and Barbara hastened to maintain a bright, chatty conversation all the way to the house, to the moment, in fact when she and Ray were safely alone in the bedroom.

Then the storm broke—She turned upon him, obsessed by the thought of her own humiliation during the past days.

"Now, Ray Lowther, perhaps you'll be good enough to explain what possessed you to leave as you did . . ."

She was perpetually near to tears and Ray, seeing it, could more gently than he might otherwise have done:
