

GHOUL QUINTET SOUGHT INDIAN GOLD IS CLAIM

Desecration of Tribal Graves in Umatilla Reservation Is Charged Against Three Men, Two Women Held in Portland.

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 24.—(Sp.)—Five alleged diggers for fortunes of gold and jewels, buried according to tribal legend, in the unmarked grave of a beloved Indian chief of the Umatilla Indian reservation, were being held in the county jail here today for Umatilla authorities.

Those arrested are: Tom Woods, mixed breed Indian, Josephine Woods Warren, his daughter; Roy Warren, white, husband of the daughter; Florence Frush Gross, mixed Indian and Manuel Gross, husband of Florence and a Negro shoe shiner here.

The arrests were a result of the suspicions entertained by O. J. Jabcok, superintendent of the Indian reservation who said Woods had been seen loitering about the reservation at the time the graves had been opened. He said Woods formerly resided on the reservation.

The five alleged ghouls, according to authorities, told them a story of how great wealth was supposed to have been buried with an Indian chief. They said they raided the graves twice, both times at night, the two women driving an automobile back and forth before the scene of the grave digging.

The quintet, however, denied opening a grave in the Troutdale cemetery and removing the body of an Oregon City resident who died in 1921.

They probably will be prosecuted under the state statute against grave desecrating.

TALENT RECEPTION FOR TEACHERS FRIDAY EVE

TALENT, Ore., Oct. 24.—(Sp.)—The Talent Community club invites the teachers and patrons of the school and strangers in the community to attend a reception given in their honor at the community hall Friday, October 25, at 8 p. m. LARGE CROWD ENJOYS SHADY COVE SCHOOL DEDICATION PROGRAM

SHADY COVE, Ore., Oct. 24.—(Special)—Our new school house was dedicated last Friday evening with a program as follows:

Dedication address by Miss Burr, who also presented the school with a silk flag as token from the county fair for the good work by the school children the last year.

Judge Thomas gave a talk and much good advice which was much appreciated.

Mrs. Glen Fabric of Medford then spoke in an exhortation, also urged a parent-teacher association as a great help in the school. Every one was well pleased with her remarks.

William and Norman Able rendered a fine harmonica duet, followed by a song solo by Norman, accompanied by William Able with his harmonica.

Mrs. Matilda Barker gave a splendid reading on work, its benefits and pleasures, and a reading and recitation by Ely Still was appreciated by all as evidenced by the hearty applause.

Mr. Trusty and son, Waldo of Ashland gave two fine harmonica selections.

After remarks from others, light refreshments were served. There were about 250 people present. We thank all who helped to make this a very pleasant evening and one to be proud of and long to be remembered.

HALLOWE'EN PROGRAM AT ANTIOCH FRIDAY

BEAGLE, Ore., Oct. 24.—(Sp.)—The second meeting of the P. T. A. of Antioch for the fall season of 1929 will be held at the school house Friday evening, October 25. After a short business meeting, Francis E. Willard Day will be observed and a Halloween program will be rendered. The rest of the evening will be devoted to Halloween pranks and games. The evening will be closed by serving suitable refreshments. Every one in the district is cordially invited to attend.

THE LUXURY HUSBAND

SYNOPSIS: Ralph Henderson's arrival in America serves to widen the gap between Barbara and Ray. She is continually in the company of the Englishman, while Ray, embittered by his futile efforts at the office of Barbara's uncle, becomes moody and refuses to accompany them on any of their numerous parties. He finally renounces one night, however, and is hopelessly bored by the affair. He accidentally overhears a conversation in which a girl, chiding Henderson for his attachment to Barbara, declares she cannot understand why Ray allows Henderson to accompany them. "Who pays the piper may call the tune."

Chapter 22
A "LUXURY" REVOLTS
HENDERSON'S words rang in Ray's ears for hours afterwards.

"Who pays the piper is at liberty to call the tune."
Nothing original—a trite phrase—and yet it seemed to sum up the whole situation.

At first he had felt impelled to get up and hit Henderson. He determined to wait until he saw the man alone, but it was being forced home to him that there was a certain grim justice in what the Englishman had said.

Barbara did pay the piper, and if the tune she wanted to call was a flirtation with Henderson what right had he, Ray, to interfere with her?

How he wished that he had stuck to his original intention and refused to touch a penny of her money! His love for her had made him weak and his weakness now tied his hands, making him powerless to protest. Since the first day of their honeymoon he had allowed himself to drift into the habit of accepting money from his wife. Now he saw only too clearly just where that had led him.

A grim smile hovered about his mouth. To what had that woman on the ship likened him? To a luxury Barbara was able to afford. At the time he had thought it a joke. Since then it had become the ironic truth.

He loved Barbara as intensely as ever, yet that night he felt that the situation had become intolerable and that to stay with her longer would mean the sacrifice of every vestige of his self-respect.

Pacing up and down the little room, while from outside came strident laughter, he determined that something should be done. He chewed it over all night and into the following morning. At noon, in a downtown cafeteria, he chanced upon Bill Foster, returned the day previously from his London orchestral successes.

Towards the end of the week Henderson departed to visit friends in Boston.

He had been with the Lowthers six weeks and, during that time, he had seen sufficient to realize that relations between Barbara and Ray were far from satisfactory. Therefore he deemed it advisable to leave them alone for a while, in the hope that a climax might be reached while he was away.

And in this Ray played deliberately into his hands.

The second evening after Henderson had gone Barbara and Ray found themselves, as though by some miracle, alone. Dinner over, Barbara drew up a chair before the fire and motioned Ray to do the same.

"Miserable night," she murmured as she rubbed her hands over the hot blaze of logs. "But it's nice to have an evening alone together—once in a while, isn't it?"

"Yes, once in a while." Although she noticed a shade of sarcasm in his tones, she laughed and let it pass. She remembered he had mate while the men folk were hunting. They returned home Saturday evening. Mr. McIntyre bringing in a fine deer.

T. E. Dunnington returned Sunday from a hunting trip up the Applegate with Harry Helm.

Lee Smith and Ray Coleman, with friends from Medford, returned Sunday from a 10 days' hunting trip in Klamath county. They were not fortunate enough to bring home any deer.

Because of heavy tourist traffic to the Bok shipping tower at Lake Wales, Fla., parking space near the tower will be enlarged to accommodate 2,500 automobiles.

OVER 200 BOOKS ADDED FOR HIGH SCHOOL LIBRARY

More than 200 new books have been added to the high school library this fall, according to Miss Myrna Barrett, school librarian. These additions make a total of approximately 4100 volumes in the school library at the present time. The collection includes text books, general reference books and some fiction. With a few exceptions, it is the general function of the school library to provide books for supplementary reading to be used along with the text in the various courses which the students furnish themselves.

In a few cases, where an unusual number of books are required in a particular course, or the books are unusually expensive, the texts are furnished by the school board, and made available in the library. The list of texts furnished includes: History of American Literature by Boynton; Modern Biography by Hyde; Modern Biography by Low; The Speech Arts by Craig; Poems of Today by Cooper; Art in Home and Clothing by Trilling; Everyday Foods by Bailey; Vocational Guidance by Davis; McMillan Edition of Homer's Odyssey; trigonometry texts and solid geometry texts.

In addition to the book collection, approximately 50 magazines and newspapers are available in the school library, thus giving the students library service on a par with that offered by the best high schools in the state. There is a staff of eight students working in the library at present for credit. A regular course in library methods is taught at present for credit. A regular course in library methods is taught and in addition to the work in the library during the class period, regular assignments are prepared. The books are being re-lettered in order that they may be easily identified and checked when missing. Miss Barrett has charge of the libraries in all the Medford public schools.
