

THE LUXURY HUSBAND

SYNOPSIS: The "luxury husband" revolts! Ray, convinced he and Barbara can never be happy while he is dependent on her money, makes a decisive move. Henderson leaves their home for a visit in Boston, hoping the strained relations between Barbara and Ray will reach a crisis in his absence. That night Ray announces his decision to Barbara. He has left his job in her uncle's office, is determined to win his independence as a composer of songs and until he has made good, will leave his wife, Barbara's despair turns to rage a few moments later, when from Ray's den come the wailing notes of his saxophone, playing a poignant tune of his own, "Those Grievous 'Leavin' Blues'."

THE LAND OF JAZZ

THE wailing of Ray's saxophone echoed in Barbara's ears as she picked up the telephone receiver. "Mrs. Ray Lowther there? Boston calling?" Henderson, of course, could she be bothered speaking to him? As she hesitated, faintly clearly she heard again the notes of the saxophone. Her eyes were thunder dark, lit by a sudden flash of fury. "Mrs. Ray Lowther is speaking..." A moment's silence and then Henderson's voice.

A saxophonist again—in Broadway's latest and most glamorous night club.

"Barbara, dear, I'm rottenly miserable away from you. What do you say to my coming back to New York?" A pause, then in a rush: "Yes, come, Henny, I want you." She dropped the receiver, straightening herself she listened mechanically. It seemed the sound of jazz completely filled the room. Suddenly she felt that she must get away from it. She ran breathlessly out of the apartment and a moment later she found herself in the wide entrance hall demanding a taxi. The porter whistled for one and when it arrived she gave the driver Cora Trenton-Jones' address.

The cab rattled on down the avenue while outside the wind howled. She had passed almost into a state of coma when suddenly she leaned forward, fear in her eyes. For she had fancied she had heard faintly the wall of a saxophone. Ray took off his mask and wiped his forehead. It was a golden mask, designed especially for the Golden Symphony Light, the jazz band of the Golden Dollar club, latest and smartest of New York's night clubs. "These things are hot," he grumbled. "If we didn't come out here every now and then for a breathing space, I'd suffocate, like you."

"You're right there," said Bill Foster, looking unusually plump in an evening suit of metal cloth with purple satin facings, "but you've got to admit this crazy stunt has been a success, rigging us up in these golden tuxedos with masks to hide our fatal beauty from the public gaze. Every one's crazy to learn who we are, whereas, if there were no mystery about us, not a soul would care."

"Boy, you've said it," the saxophonist, a large, portly man, broke in, "there are the craziest stories circulating. I heard, the other night, that we were all sons of prominent society folks—millionaires mostly—and that we wore masks to save old family names from eternal disgrace!" They laughed at that, as they sat in a little anteroom during an interval. "How long do you think we'll be able to keep it up?" asked the violinist. "Can't say," said Drums. "Personally, I don't care how long they keep it up. Suits me fine."

"Same here," muttered Ray under his breath. Auxiliary organizations have been invited, and the general public is also urged to attend the sessions. Glenn Simpson, Guy Applewhite, and Hubert Bentley make a trip to Grants Pass on Tuesday to transact business in connection with the Legion conference.

CALENDAR HOLDER PROVIDES CLUE TO LONG LOST TRUNK

SAMS VALLEY, Ore., Oct. 26.—(Special).—The trunk which Mrs. Chas. Hutchison has had so much trouble in tracing up has just been recovered, with an interesting story of the railway company's tracing it up.

Mrs. Hutchison left about six weeks ago to visit relatives in Wyoming, checking two trunks for her destination. After but one trunk had arrived she commenced an investigation regarding the second trunk, which contained most of her clothing, and reported back to the Gold Hill agent.

The matter has been under the attention of railroad officials and Mr. and Mrs. Hutchison since that time until Wednesday when Mr. Hutchison was notified that one of his neighbors had in her possession his wife's trunk.

Details revealed that the trunk, minus its tag, left Billings, Mont., to the "on hand" office at San Francisco, where it was opened. With no clue to its ownership other than a calendar holder with the address of the neighbor lady. When this lady received the trunk and opened it for investigation, the calendar holder was the only clue found. She remembered to whom she had given the calendar, and notified her friend, who also remembered having given the holder to Mrs. Hutchison.

Mr. Hutchison was notified and quickly identified his wife's clothes and notified her in Wyoming that her clothes were at home.

Standing with the boys on the platform, Bill Foster would lean across and whisper, "Come on, Ray, lead us in one of your own, we'll follow you." And when, at the end, the dancers would applaud, often uproariously—for Ray's tunes were sure-fire jazz—he would be repaid by that thrill which comes from acclimated recognition of something you have created.

Those were days when he felt desperately lonely for her—when he doubted whether any recognition was worth the risk he was taking in sacrificing her love. But there were compensations.

FOUR-H CLUBS AT BELLVIEW SCHOOL

BELLVIEW, Ore., Oct. 26.—(Special).—About seventy-five attended the Bellview P. T. A. last week to enjoy a program. Mr. Croft of Ashland, brought out a ten-piece orchestra and Miss Mable Mack, county demonstration agent, gave an interesting talk on 4-H club work.

Miss Mack organized five 4-H clubs at Bellview school on Monday morning. The Canning Club is composed of fifteen boys, with Mrs. McKinney as leader. A handwork club, composed of nine of the younger girls has chosen Norma Reeder as leader.

The sewing and cooking clubs are organized but leaders have not yet been chosen. The Bachelor Sewing club will be led by Miss Lola Talbot. Ralph Halbert and son Elmer, left for southern California Thursday morning. They expect to find work in the fruit there.

Mrs. Wade Wallis, Mrs. L. D. Meserve, Mrs. Roy Talbot, Mrs. Mable Meryman, Miss Maud Forhan and Mrs. Mark True were entertained at the home of Mrs. Archie Kincaid on Thursday afternoon.

ROGUE RIVER MAN HAS TROUBLESOME INJURY. ROGUE RIVER, Ore., Oct. 26.—(Special).—Frank McCarvel, who suffered a broken leg some time ago, has been having considerable trouble with the injured member. At last reports it had to be re-broken and was threatened with gangrene.

SHEEP AND GRAIN BUYERS ARE BUSY IN SAMS VALLEY

SAMS VALLEY, Ore., Oct. 26.—(Special).—A lamb buyer was here Monday and bought all salable lambs in our district.

Grain and hay buyers from Grants Pass have been doing considerable buying in this section lately.

Sunday visitors with Mrs. Walter Scott and family were Mrs. Etta Stevenson and daughter, Miss June Earhart of Medford, and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stevenson of Portland, who are visiting in the valley with headquarters at Medford. Mrs. Scott is slowly recovering from a serious illness.

A baby boy was born October 18 to Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Koger at the Sacred Heart hospital. The Ladies' club met Thursday with Mrs. E. A. White at Eagle Point, where they enjoyed the usual good time with this fine old lady. The next meeting will be held with Mrs. Max Schuk as hostess.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Dodge and children of Medford visited Sunday with the O. T. Wilson family.

GOLD HILL BEACON SEEN MANY MILES. GOLD HILL, Ore., Oct. 26.—(Special).—The beacon light situated on the high point north of Gold Hill is now in operation. Much work was necessary to install the light. The mountainside had to be cleared so as to get the beacon to the high point.

Many reports have been received as to the power of the light. It is easily seen from Central Point and can be seen fairly well from Medford. Several residents have stated that it can be seen clearly from Grants Pass and even the other side.

The beacon is supposed to be visible at a 50-mile range from the air and this seems easily possible. On foggy evenings the beacon throws a flare for miles through the mist.

A number of local residents have visited the light at the high point north of this city.

GOLD HILL, Ore., Oct. 26.—(Special).—Mr. and Mrs. Tom Morrow are visiting at the home of his son, Frank Morrow. Among the visitors from this city to Klamath Falls this week are Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Reinking and Mr. and Mrs. Tom Kronholm. J. W. Bryan is working at the Sylvanite mine.
