Grange Motto
In essentials, unity;
In non-essentials, liberty;
In all things, charity.
Individual happiness depends upon general prosperity: For we seek the greatest good to the greatest number.

No Grange can live through the years and hold its membership unless it is vitally interested in the local problems of the community.

By their fruits ye shall know them: as true today as it was two thousand years ago. The Grange, or any other organization, is best measured by the actual accomplishments that flow from its activities.

The Grange and its work has been many-sided and practical. It has touched every activity of rural life. It has stimulated all movements that add to the material welfare of the farmer.

Co-operation
Friends, there's something I want to tell you;
Something I think we should do;
Let's all join the construction gang
And not the wrecking crew.

Service
The only farmer's fraternity in the world is also an institution of overflowing and practical service.

Pomona Grange
Pomona Grange met at Winter in the attractive Enterprise Grange hall which is so picturesquely set in a large grove of madroña, oak and fir trees on the banks of the beautiful Evans creek.

At no time of the year is the scenery along the highway and through the Evans creek valley more beautiful than at this time of the year when all the foliage is turned to red and gold and one looks down on the busy crystal clear stream going peacefully, altho energetically, on its way.

All of this is enhanced by the background of dense green firs against the gray hills and standing out in bold relief are the immense madroña and the smaller wild rose bushes, both loaded with their brilliant red berries and pips, and with the clear blue sky overhead makes a picture long to be remembered.

Perhaps this beautiful drive had much to do with the splendid spirit of good-fellowship which pervaded the entire session.

A large attendance from most of the sub-ordinate Granges in the county attended this tri-monthly meet.

The excellent community dinner which is always a feature of the Pomona, was served by the Enterprise Grange ladies and was the scene of much visiting and much merriment.

After dinner the lecturer presented the following program, every number of which was very fine. Two songs by the Grange, "The More We Get Together" and "The Grange is Marching".

Two numbers by the four-piece Enterprise Grange orchestra, saxophone, banjo, drum and piano, vocal solo, Mrs. Ruth York Hood: "Sleepy Hollow Tunes," with Mrs. Houghton at the piano; reading, "The National Air" by Mrs. King. This reading was preceded by singing all verses of "The Star Spangled Banner" and was an interesting bit of history on the origin of this officially accepted national song.

Vocal solos by Miss Doris Richardson, "When My Dreams Come True" and "I'll Always Be in Love With You," with Mrs. Sims at the piano. Piano solo by Mrs. Mabel Sims which was a group of polka-dots, "College Songs" a skit by Mr. and Mrs. Fuhrman which was very amusing, "An Evening at Home," Harmonica solo by Mr. Jackson; reading by Mrs. Sparks, "A Few Words on Voting" which contained some timely advice on the need of every citizen voting, or "Don't Be a Slicker."

Mr. Johnson of the Rogue River Valley Grange in Josephine county, master of the largest grange in the state, made a short and interesting talk.

Names of another large class of candidates were submitted and will be balloted upon at the next regular meeting.
Due to a change in the state by-laws, election of officers will be held at this meeting, November 14.
Enjoyable numbers on the literary program were a reading by Claus Charley, an interesting account of his trip to the Philadelphia by Mike Hanley, Jr., and a group song, "The Grange is Marching On."

THE LUXURY HUSBAND

SYNOPSIS: The first rung on the ladder of success! Rita Tilton, more dancer at the Golden Dollar club, invites Ray to make supper with her. Intrigued by Ray's composition, "The Grange" Blues, she wants permission to see it for a specialty dance number at the club and is enthusiastic over the song's prospects as a great hit. Ray is naturally elated and encouraged by Rita's interest, encourages her to make a great hit. At the first night tryout of the song and dance, there is no doubt as to the success. An idea and Ray are bowing to the thunderous applause of the guests. Barbara and Helen Henderson walk into the club.

Chapter 25 A RESOLUTION

THEY started to come, Barbara cloaked in velvet, her head necked in an immense ermine collar, her silver slippers twinkling down the purple carpet, stopped suddenly with a little gasp.

"Hendy—what's the time they're playing?"
"Never heard it to my knowledge, have you?"

"Yes... yes... yes..."
Only she could not remember where she stood there listening, conscious only that each note brought back poignant, heart-tearing memories. It seemed to her that the man who played the saxophone was playing it unnecessarily loud.

Suddenly she knew that she could not go down into that club and face hours of remembering, of regretting.

"Let's go home, Hendy, and have supper there. Somehow I feel queer, not like dancing. At home we can be comfortable and have a cozy chat."

"Righto."
He was not sorry. He had heard that at the Golden Dollar you danced at the approximate cost of a dollar a step. He was none too flush at the moment. Recently he had cabled for more supplies from England, but he knew that even there his funds were almost negative. It costs money entertaining an heiress in the manner she had been accustomed.

But he regarded it as money well invested. What are a few thousand dollars when millions are at stake? Back in her apartment the butler laid supper in the cozy, luxurious sitting room and withdrew. Barbara flung herself down on to a couch. Her eyes were bright with restlessness, flitting about the room until finally they came to pause upon Henderson, sitting on the opposite end of the couch playing with a cushion as though it had been an accordion.

She stretched out her hand and flicked a piece of swansdown from his sleeve.

"You're a dear to pamper me as you do, Hendy. I've been awful difficult lately."

He caught the hand that still lingered on his sleeve.

"I won't say that you haven't," his eyes smiled down into hers. "but I can surmise the cause. I know you're not happy, Barbara."

"Of course I am. What nonsense, Hendy. Can't I be a little tired without your thinking I'm unhappy?"

"I don't know. You're so often like that lately—moody and distant. I don't think life is altogether satisfactory for you. Married and yet not married. Why don't you make yourself come to a definite decision? After all, he's forfeited any possible claim to your consideration."

His hand crept higher up her arm, playing with her elbow.

"You know I love you, my dear. How much longer are you going to keep me waiting?"

"But you could be... He deserted you."

Yes—he had deserted her, and, as before, on account of his pride. She had wanted to give him everything, but instead of accepting it gratefully, he had thrown her gifts back in her face. Even the gift of herself. At that she set her teeth and a sense of physical pain shot through her.

Divorce seemed the only alternative. She kept telling herself that she would wait another week and at the end of that time she would decide to wait yet another.

"Don't worry me tonight, Hendy, there's a dear. I've a headache and, anyhow, I hate coming to decisions."

"But think of me, Barbara. It's terrific going on in this incertitude... when I love you as I do!"

Her hand gently touched his cheek.

"Bless you, Hendy. But give me longer, please."

He said slowly, taking hold of both her hands and pressing them together:

"I wouldn't mind waiting an eternity, if necessary, were it going to make you happier. But the longer you wait the longer you'll fret. A divorce is like having a noth pulled, old dear. A nasty sharp pain and then months of relief. Take my advice and have it over!"

He laughed reassuringly, "I swear in six months I will have made you forget that the tooth was ever there at all!"

She smiled wistfully. "I—I guess you're right, Hendy. I'll think about it."

"But that, my dear, is just what you shouldn't do! Thinking is foolishness under the existing circumstances. You should act—not think. Why don't you try to be more like your old self? Have a good time, organize some parties. Snap your fingers at regrets long enough and hard enough and you'll find regrets dissolving into this air."

ADDED FEATURES IN LEGION DANCE TO DRAW CROWD

Indications are that a record crowd will attend the Halloween dance to be given by the American Legion at the Oriental Gardens Thursday night. This is the first of a series of holiday dances to be given by the local Legionnaires and they are sparing no effort to make the first of the series a rousing success.

Special features of entertainment and favors have been added to the Speed Dance Contest, which has aroused considerable interest among Southern Oregon dance lovers. The contest will determine the couples who most perfectly execute the new fast time for trots and one steps. The applause of the crowd present will determine the winners. Friends of the various entrants are already extolling the merits of their favorite candidates.

Another feature new to Southern Oregon dance crowds will be the plan of free admissions to the hall. Heretofore all dances have had a door admission charge, but the Legionnaires have dispensed with this entirely and have also promised to have plenty of extra seats for those who wish to attend and enjoy the music and entertainment features even though they do not dance. A serpentine table will also help to enliven the party, which the sponsors hope to be one of the most enjoyable functions of the fall season.

The committee in charge of the dance consists of Emil Brophy, Robert Strang, Horace Bromley and Henry Fluhrer, chairman.

WHAT a pity! She was so interesting, so charming. Yet everyone, even relatives, slighted her.

Then came the change. Today there is no happier, more admired woman than Aunt Kit. Let her tell you how easily she ended her trouble—"B.O." Body Odor!

"I should have known better than to take a chance with 'B.O.'"

"But I did seem safe. I didn't realize we can't notice an odor once it becomes familiar. Doctors say pores give off as much as a quart of odor-causing waste daily—even in cool weather."

"Now, with Lifebuoy to safeguard me, my 'B.O.' worries are ended. Its marvelous antiseptic lather purifies so deeply, you feel gloriously fresh—cleaner than ever—after a Lifebuoy bath."

"We all love Lifebuoy for complexion, too. And it makes us feel so safe, knowing it removes germs. Its pleasant extra-odor scent, which washes as you rinse, just tells you Lifebuoy purifies."

TREATMENT OF RHEUMATISM

No Longer Effective Cause Must Be Removed Chiropractors Assert

Of all the chronic disorders to which man is subject, there is perhaps none more common than that of rheumatism in its various forms, and none which so handicaps the activities of man and limits his possibilities.

POPULAR BELIEF
Because of the great number of patients suffering with this condition, many so-called cures have been placed upon the market, including the long series of liniments and the many compounds which are taken internally with a hope of effecting a relief. A very careful study has been made of rheumatism, and investigators have spent much time and effort in trying to determine the actual cause of the disease. The sum total of all this investigation has led to the popular belief, expressed through written articles and in medical fraternity, that rheumatism is caused by the excessive retention of uric acid in the body.

All efforts toward treatment have led to the general premise of administering some combination of chemicals which would neutralize the uric acid and thus restore health.

Those who have studied the subject find that investigators do not agree as to uric acid always being the cause of rheumatism. Their contention is that uric acid is produced by the accumulation of lactic acid, or by the presence of micro-organisms. This is mentioned merely to show that the actual cause of the disease is dependent upon the opinion the practitioner holds as to what is the actual cause of the disease.

THE QUESTION
We will concede, for the sake of argument, that the contention which holds that uric acid, lactic acid or micro-organisms are responsible for rheumatism is true. Even though we make this concession we must follow it up by asking the question, "Why is there an excess of uric acid, lactic acid or micro-organisms present?" Has it ever occurred to the scientific investigator to look for the cause of these unusual conditions in the body which produces those causes? In brief, is it logical to inject something into the body for the purpose of neutralizing an abnormal substance, or is it logical to eliminate the cause which has led to the production of that abnormal substance?

Normally there is a certain amount of uric acid in the blood. Normally there is a certain amount of lactic acid in the system. Harmful micro-organisms can only exist in the body when the conditions offer them a place of residence.

THE ANSWER
The liver is principally concerned in the formation of uric acid, although it is produced in small quantities by all the active organs in the body. An excessive amount of lactic acid is the result of improper action of the liver cell. Normally the liver functions properly, and it is only when it is functioning abnormally that uric acid can be formed in excessive quantities. Normally excretion takes place to a sufficient extent to eliminate any excessive lactic acid. If the liver does not function properly, it is supplied with uric acid, and this places normally, then let us look to these causes instead of leaving them in their abnormal state and trying to neutralize the effect of the abnormality.

All function in the body is dependent upon the quantity and quality of nervous energy which is supplied through the nervous system. If the function of the organ is abnormal, it is because the nerve supply from the brain is abnormal. The reason why the liver does not function normally and the reason for the lack of oxidation in the tissue cells is because the nerve fibers, which transmit vital energy to the liver, are thus rendered incapable of carrying their proper supply. In other words, if we grant that uric acid and lactic acid are productive of rheumatism, we must trace the cause back still further and find the reason why these substances are manufactured in excessive amounts.

As it is true that uric acid and lactic acid are normally manufactured in the body, so it is also true that they must be eliminated from the body. If their elimination does not keep pace with their production, they will also manifest themselves in excessive amounts. Therefore, upon the kidneys, as the principal excretory organs, develop the function of maintaining that elimination at the normal. If the kidneys do not function normally, rheumatism may manifest itself, but in reality the primary cause is the inability of the kidneys to function properly because it is not receiving its normal amount of vital energy through the nervous system.

LOGIC
In any of these cases, the only place where the nerves can be pressed upon is where they emit from the spinal column, passing between the adjacent vertebrae. Here they are subject to pressure if subluxations (slight displacements) of the vertebrae exist.

The Chiropractor is specially trained to know what parts of the spine may be involved in cases of rheumatism. He is specially trained to locate these abnormal conditions in the spine and to correct them. He makes no difference whether the rheumatism is in one form or another, whether it is articular, muscular, acute or chronic, the cause traces to its last analysis lies in the inability of the nervous system to properly function because of impingements on the nerve fibers. The only logical way to correct the condition is to adjust the vertebrae so that the several organs of the body function normally.

This contention has been proven true time after time on thousands of cases.
