JACKSONVILLE, Ore., Nov. 8.—(Special)—A large crowd attended the Halloween frolic given Friday evening at the school gymnasium and all enjoyed the evening.

The booths were quite successful. The following program was given: Performance by the lower grades; piano selection, Ray Lewis; play, "Colonial Halloween," fifth and sixth grades; violin solo, Marcelle Negaard; son, "Flappers Follow," seventh and eighth grades; dance, fifth and sixth grades, directed by Lulu Meigs; ghost school, lower grades; vocal solo, "Out of the Dark to You," by Virginia Negaard, and the tumbling act by Birdie McIntosh.

SAMS VALLEY STOCK KILLED BY HUNTERS

SAMS VALLEY, Ore., Nov. 8.—(Special)—Sams Valley district did not fare so well through the hunting season as Table Rock is reported to have done. Chas. Hutchinson has lost the use of one of his work horses from a careless hunter and D. T. Wilson lost a highly prized Jersey heifer from apparently the same cause. These conditions are awakening our farmers to the need of checking reckless hunting.

WILLOW SPRINGS

WILLOW SPRINGS, Ore., Nov. 8.—(Special)—A number from this vicinity attended the dedication of the memorial tablets at Fort Lane and Fort Birdseye.

THE LUXURY HUSBAND

SYNOPSIS: Barbara, determined to learn the truth of Henderson's charges, goes to the building in which Rita has her apartment. Driven by desperation, she crawls up a fire-escape to a window of Rita's suite. A few minutes later, Rita comes home and with her is Ray. Barbara is seized by her discovery and leaves her hiding place. When she returns to her taxi, however, she decides to wait in the cab, confidently expecting that Ray will soon leave the building. For two hours she keeps her lonely vigil and finally goes home in despair. Ten minutes later, Ray leaves the building, having worked longer than usual on a particularly difficult tune.

Chapter 25 EXIT—AN ENGLISHMAN

ON the drive home from the frontally futile vigil before Rita Gilmore's apartment, Barbara definitely decided to marry Henderson. A sense of bitterly hurt pride drove her to this decision. She decided on telephoning him the first thing in the morning. For the remainder of the night she would try to sleep.

She did try. She tried in a persistent, determined fashion. But, in spite of that, she lay awake until dawn.

Eventually, when she did sleep, a nightmare tormented her. Suddenly she opened her eyes, immediately conscious that her telephone was ringing.

She picked up the receiver.

"That you, Barbara? It's your Uncle Henry. I'm coming right up to the house. Must see you immediately."

She felt more than surprised. Mr. Vandaveer Landon was an exceptionally busy man. It was most unusual for him to honor his niece by a visit during an hour usually reserved strictly for business. So intent was she upon not keeping him waiting that she completely forgot to telephone her decision to Henderson.

Mr. Landon was pacing the sitting room when she finally came down.

"Morning Barbara. Can't say that you're looking well," Barbara smiled wanly.

"Late night," she explained.

"Been out with that fellow Henderson?"

"Yes, Why?"

Her uncle cleared his throat. Then, in characteristic manner, came directly to the point.

"What's all this I'm hearing about you and him?"

Barbara stiffened and turned slowly to face him.

"Meaning that we've been seen about a good deal together?"

"No. I've just heard that you intend divorcing Ray in order to marry him."

Barbara's eyes widened. Mr. Landon decided that, whatever she intended doing, she didn't look too happy about it.

"Who told you that?" Barbara asked wonderingly. "I only decided it myself last night."

"That so?" Mr. Landon paced the carpet once more. "Then there's been some fishy business going on, my dear, and I think you'd better hear of it."

As he spoke he threw himself down into the only rocking-chair.

"It's like this. Yesterday a fellow, name of Fraeman, called into my office—he arranges loans for those in need of financial assistance. After he'd hemmed and hawed for several minutes he inquired, as discreetly as possible, what truth there was in the rumor that my niece intended to divorce her present husband to marry Ralph Henderson. Then he told me, after I had bamboozled him into it, that the fellow had been obtaining loans from him on that understanding."

"You mean—that Henty's been borrowing money on the strength of marrying me?" Barbara's voice was one gasp of amazement.

Her uncle nodded.

Barbara didn't feel she could believe it at first. Too absurd it was—ludicrous almost. Henderson of all men! How contemptible to borrow money with the intention of eventually paying it back out of hers!

She remembered how repeatedly he had sneered at Ray for the method he chose to make his livelihood.

How, under the circumstances, had he dared criticize Ray? For
