THE LUXURY HUSBAND

SYNOPSIS: Barbara declines Henderson immediately upon her uncle's revelation that Henderson has been borrowing money...

ABOUT A DIVORCE

TO Barbara came the sudden realization that, unlike herself, Rita was evidently interested in Ray as a musician as well as a man...

As her mind swept back over the past she recalled, with painful vividness, many times when Ray had pleaded with her to take some interest in his work...

Barbara found herself looking at him with new eyes. So Ricardo, too, had loved! She and this water-poles apart socially, yet each with the same capacity for suffering when an affair of the heart had gone awry...

Barbara isn't interested in my composing, Bill. It had been true. She had not attempted to interest herself in it...

Through her own egotism she had lost him. Had she thrown herself heart and soul into his work then, she suddenly became convinced, this—this pending divorce need never have happened...

Yet she was back at the Golden Dollar club the following night and for many nights afterward. She was unable to stay away. So simple it became to slip into the little booth, secure from prying eyes...

Always she sat in the same place. Luckily it was a table few seemed to favor. Invariably she was waited upon by the same smiling Italian youth—Ricardo, she learnt to call him...

It was absurd, but she seemed to derive a queer sort of comfort from talking of her love to this sympathetic young waiter.

REAL ESTATE DEALS NUMEROUS IN TALENT

TALENT, Ore., Nov. 11.—(Sp.)—Another real estate transfer was closed in Talent Wednesday when Mrs. L. L. Epperson exchanged her holdings here for the acre tract on B street in Ashland...

He sighed. "It's sad, I, too, know ze unhappiness of being separated from some one I love."

Barbara found herself looking at him with new eyes. So Ricardo, too, had loved! She and this water-poles apart socially, yet each with the same capacity for suffering when an affair of the heart had gone awry.

Her eyes softened as she looked at him. "Tell me, Ricardo."

He fidgeted with the napkin over his arm. "I see ze girl I left behind me in Italy. She promise me to wait until I haf money to send for her. At first she write me, a few days, but now, it see sometimes zat I have not heard..."

In time Barbara came to know Ray's own compositions at the end of the first few bars. In time, too, she came, unconsciously, to wait for them.

Finally she had to admit to herself that her former sense of distaste for his work had given place to one of pride in his artistic ability.

Some people in a neighboring table were applauding at the conclusion of a number of Ray's. Barbara overheard one of them remark:

"He's a genius, that saxophone fellow. I hear the best tunes we have been dancing to tonight are his own work. Do you know who he is?"

And Barbara at that moment was filled with a sudden desire to get up and shout back, "Yes, he's Ray Lowther... my husband."

The words on the tip of her tongue, she stopped herself, amazed. Could it actually be that she wanted to acknowledge it?

They were still talking of Ray at the nearby table. "I hear the fellow is leaving the orchestra next week. He's written the score for this new revue, 'The Knave of Jazz'..."

That same night, Barbara wrote to Ray acquainting him with her decision to divorce him.

The note, brief and to the point, was the result of what she had heard that night at the club. Yet the motive that had dictated her writing was not the outcome of jealousy or pique.

She had written it for Ray's sake so that, should he sincerely love this girl, whose interests seemed identical with his own, he would be able to marry her.

She crept out in the wee hours of the morning and posted the letter herself. Dawn, she was afraid, might bring once again a desire to postpone the issue.

All the next day she went about with a dead feeling inside her. That night she refused to allow herself even the consolation of an hour at the Golden Dollar club.
