New Television Scanning System Needs But Half of Ordinary Band

CHICAGO (AP)—Two Chicago radio engineers have developed an experimental television system requiring only about half the usual wave band formerly believed necessary for good radio picture transmission and reception.

The "trick" has been to alter the arrangement of scanning disk holes. Prof. L. P. Garner and U. A. Sanabria of the Western Television corporation are the engineers.

A 100-kilocycle frequency channel generally has been used in transmitting clear images. Such a band is large enough to accommodate ten broadcast stations.

The scanning system used by Garner and Sanabria is of the common disk, multiple-spiral aperture type. A metal plate with a number of tiny holes revolves rapidly before a movie-projector lamp.

The subject to be broadcast is in the path of the interrupted beam, and the light is then reflected to photo-electric cells, which make an electrical copy of the rays.

"One fundamental difference of our system," explains Garner, "is that we need only 45 line elements instead of 50 per picture.

THE WELLSPRING OF KNOWLEDGE

Oh! Where can wisdom be found? Where is hidden the key to the door,
That is barring the way to the unknown?
Which we seek and have sought overmore?

Does it rest on the floor of the ocean,
Deep down in the darkness below?
Does it lie in the folds of the glacier,
Far up in the regions of snow?

Does it ride on the tail of the comet,
As it races by in its flight?
Does it pass in the flash of the meteor,
That is stabbing the darkness of night?

Does it float in the storm whirled that's racing,
On the disc of the great Lord of Day?
Does it rest in the bosom of Luna,
Down under the dark Tycho Brake?

I stood alone on the threshold
Of time and eternity's years,
And the vista that spread out before me
Was a long line of problems and cares.

As I listened a murmuring Zephyr
Said,
"Oh, where is the magic wand?
And a far away muttering thunder
Replied,
"The key is the brain of man."
—G. P. Hall, Sacramento, Cal.
