

GRACE BUCKLEY WINNER SECOND ESSAY LAURELS

The second prize winning essay in group two of the Community Chest contest was written by Grace Buckley, as follows:

Why One Should Contribute to the Community Chest?

What are your interests in the affairs of your community? Are you supporting the organizations that are beneficial to its citizens?

The Medford Chamber of Commerce has adopted a plan which will give us the opportunity to prove our desire to help our fellow citizens. This organization is named, "The Community Chest."

Each person who contributes is an individual member. The budget committee consists of at least five members elected for a year. Their powers are ruled by the board of directors.

The Young Women's Christian Association, Red Cross, Salvation Army, Humane society, Girl and Boy Scouts of America and the Jackson County health unit, are the organizations that are benefited by the Community Chest.

They give aid to those who must depend upon us. The object of this organization is to give us the opportunity to help our neighbors. If this is to be realized we must first have a co-operative organization that will work to bring harmony throughout our community, by taking from those who can give, and giving to those who are in need.

PHOENIX ENDEAVORERS MAP WINTER ACTIVITY

PHOENIX, Ore., Nov. 13.—(Sp.) At the executive meeting of the senior Christian Endeavor society last Thursday evening at the home of the president, Mrs. Mildred Coats, many plans were discussed for the betterment of the work in the society, and from the attitude being taken by the committee chairmen and officers, it looks as though the work in this branch of the church would increase in interest this winter.

It was decided to have one "open" each month through the winter months. It was also decided to put on special and well planned meetings each Sunday evening, outlining for each evening a certain program to follow and a goal to reach. Also plans were made for a campaign to build up the membership and attendance.

WORKS HARD IN THE FIELD

Relies Upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rankin, Illinois.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as soon as I felt my first pain. My little child was born six years ago. Then when my second child came and I felt weak and run-down, I took it again. I am still taking it and I am feeling better. My mother used it for herself when I was small and always got good results. She still takes it. I do all kinds of heavy work, including my housework and I also help in the field. I recommend the Vegetable Compound and I am willing to answer any letters."—Mrs. Bess Chapman, Route 2, Rankin, Illinois.

City Dairy Inspector Suggests Week to Stimulate Use of Milk in Diet

(By Charles W. Austin) As people are nowadays urged much to observe certain days or weeks devoted to the use of some special fruit, food or drink to thus encourage its consumption, why not then a special Milk week to stimulate greater use of this product. Mother Nature's milk, the greatest of all foods because it is claimed that in this product is to be found the nearest balanced ration contained in any single natural food. And not only that, but when considered from an economical basis, here is there to be found a less expensive diet?

Herewith we quote from a report of the National Dairy Council who had printed a certain chart illustrating the food value of milk in comparison with other articles commonly used in the daily bill of fare. According to this chart one quart of milk is represented to be worth on a comparative energy food value basis:

- 4-5 pounds beefsteak
 - 24 pounds chicken
 - 5 pound ham
 - 2-3 pounds codfish
 - 8 eggs
 - 1-1/2 pounds beans
 - 2-3 pounds peas
 - 5-6 pounds tomatoes
- Other charts illustrate the energy food value of the products of milk, such as butter, ice cream and cheese.
- We might cite many records of authoritative standing to establish the great value of using more milk in our daily foods and cooking at a lesser cost in furnishing the table, even at a greater price for milk.
- As an added help to stimulating confidence in uses of milk, let us quote extracts from a bulletin of October 1928 as issued by our state dairy food commissioner, in which Prof. G. V. Capan, bacteriologist at O. A. C., states:
- "The proper supervision of milk makes milk becoming simple in the

Medford Airport Praised by Eugene Editor As Preparation for Future

In his personal column in the Eugene Register, Frank R. Jenkins writes as follows concerning the Medford airport.

By Frank Jenkins. If you live in Oregon and keep reasonably in touch with what is going on in your own state, you have heard of Medford's new municipal airport. This writer wishes to pause here and interject the statement that in all probability you haven't heard the half of it.

The new Medford airport contains 290 acres. It has a main runway 2300 feet long, pointing into the prevailing wind. In the center of the landing field there is a landing circle 260 feet in diameter, permitting landing from any direction.

Both the long runway and the landing circle are graded, drained and gravelled, and will shortly be oiled, providing a hard, smooth surface like an oiled or macadam highway.

CALIFORNIANS SEEKING LAND EDEN PRECINCT

Mr. and Mrs. Williams intend to locate in this part of the valley soon.

Mr. Bingham has sold off an acre of his valuable little home on the highway to Mr. Hopkins, adjoining the Carey land.

BETTY JONES DIRECTS ACTIVITY ON CAMPUS

EUGENE.—(Special.) A plan that will enable the freshmen women to meet each other at the various campus living organizations has been completed by the social committee of the Theopians, freshmen women's honor group. Betty Jones, Medford, is directing the program or "Get acquainted freshmen women."

The living organizations have been divided into groups of five. Two houses in each group will be hostesses to the other three, half the freshmen women in the latter houses going to one house, and half going to the other house that is host for the evening. The affairs will be held for a half hour.

Even now they tell you that if you want to go to Portland, or to San Francisco, or to Los Angeles, and count your time as worth anything, it is cheaper to travel by air than by rail or stage. Not only that but they'll prove it to you with figures, if they can't get you to listen.

Off to one side of this waiting room is a pleasantly equipped restaurant, where pilots and passengers drop in for refreshment. Off the other side are sleeping quarters for pilots.

And in back of the building they are erecting some pretty little cottages that will be rented to pilots.

Note the word "rented." They aren't giving things away down there. They rent space to oil companies for service stations, and in addition to the rent they get two cents for every gallon of gasoline sold. Already there are two of these stations and four others will soon be built.

In its first and hardest year, they are expecting that the new Medford airport will return to the city, six per cent interest on its cost.

THE LUXURY HUSBAND

SYNOPSIS: Barbara decides to divorce Ray. He may be free to marry Rita. Convicted Rita and Ray are in love, and that their mutual interest in music had drawn them together. Barbara concludes the estrangement with Ray is her own fault and she intends to end their relations with the most unselfish act of her life. She writes Ray a short note, advising him of her plans. That afternoon, Ray and Rita are working on the revue score and he informs her of the impending divorce action. Jealous Rita loves him. Ray proposes that they marry as soon as he is free—a proposal which he unknowingly is moved to make more than a decade ago.

Chapter 11 DON QUIXOTE RAY had said, "That's settled, ah, Rita? Directly I'm free. . . . To Ray it was settled, absolutely. Rita satisfied the side of his nature that craved companionship. As for the other, the part of him that would always belong to Barbara, he stifled that by indulging in an overdose of plank.

There was plenty to be done in the weeks that followed. The score finished and approved, of rehearsals were now in full swing. Those days he hadn't time for regrets. Neither had he time to spend with Rita. They were forced to postpone the supper they had enjoyed together until Ray's contract had run out at the club exactly a week before "The Knave of Jaz" opened on Broadway.

Rita, too, was busy rehearsing during the day. But nights she was free. Pete Anheim had insisted that she give up her work at the club. Otherwise, he told her, she would arrive at the opening night in a hearse.

Rita wasn't her gay sparkling self those days. During rehearsal time, or when she was with Ray, she managed to simulate a light-hearted manner. But at night she was perpetually conscious of a doubt nagging at the back of her brain.

Did Ray love her as he should love the girl he intended to make his wife? Ray's attitude was too matter of fact, too altogether sane. It lacked that breathless something which makes two people imagine they can live as cheaply as one and rushes couples to the altar when they have hardly the price of the minister's fee.

She told herself that his attitude might change after marriage. But always the fact reassured itself that Ray was still in love with his wife.

Yes, even granting that, she saw no reason why she should give him back to his wife, presuming Barbara should want him.

Ray had asked her to marry him once he was free. Nothing short of a deliberate act on her part would make him go back on that.

Yet she could not help thinking a good deal about Ray's wife. She wondered what the girl was like and what lay behind her sudden decision to divorce Ray.

There was always the possibility of another man. Rita wished she knew for certain. Lately she had been tormented by the thought that maybe Barbara too, was in love with Ray. That perhaps they were both little more than stupid, wilful children who only needed the intercession of a third party to make them kiss and be friends. Yet she saw no earthly reason why she should be that third person—she who loved Ray herself as she had loved no other man.

Nevertheless, a few days later, she found herself making a slow and reluctant progress up Park avenue towards the stately apartment house where Barbara lived. She walked the length of the block four times before she finally rushed into the elevator. Even when she was directly before Barbara's front door she was on the point of turning back.

"You idiot," she muttered, "why are you deliberately risking your happiness?" All the same she pressed the doorbell.

"Is Mrs. Lowber in?" The butler inclined his head. "Please come in. Whom shall I say wishes to see her?" "Miss Rita Harris."
