OPERATING TABLE OF MODERN TYPE NOW AT HOSPITAL

The installation of a new operating table, the latest in design, was completed this week in the surgery of the Barred Heart hospital. In keeping with an improvement program that has been begun by that institution, the new table, manufactured by the American Medical Instrument Co. of Madison, Wis., has every possible attachment for facilitating the surgical operations.

It has a special attachment for thyroid operations, holding the neck in position, and it has a saddle used in holding the patient in certain positions when kidney or gall bladder operations are performed. By the manipulation of several pedals and a crank at the foot, the table can be placed in any position, holding the head of the patient high or low, or the same with the feet. Attachments also make it possible to take care of patients taller than six feet, and to hold patients in place by wrist and leg straps and by a shoulder device.

There is an instrument-board device over the patient and it remains level through all stages of the operation, though the table may be in a tilted position. This is important as some of surgical benefit to the attending physician. A new machine for the administration of gas has also been installed in the surgery, but it has not yet been used, other being in use.

The old operating table has been moved to an adjacent surgery, where it will still find considerable use. The third surgery of the hospital is used principally for the performance of minor operations, such as the removal of tonsils, adenoids, etc., and is equipped with a table, chairs and a lamp, in addition to operating instruments. A complete X-ray laboratory is also located on the surgery floor and is in considerable use. The hospital laboratory, located on the first floor, is used for the purpose of a laboratory of general medicine and surgery.
