SUNDOWN STORIES

THE OXEN TEAM

By Mary Graham Bonner.

"We're still turning the time back," the Little Black Clock said.

"The night-before-last you had a trip in an airplane where you could see how heavy the traffic was, and last night I turned the time way back to the days when the first trains traveled at night, and tonight—well, you shall see!"

The Little Black Clock has certainly turned the time way back.

It was morning, years and years and years before, and there were very, very few people about. In fact, the world looked very new, and there were only huts instead of houses.

There were woods nearby, and scattered about everywhere were animals—horses, dogs, sheep, goats and oxen.

"We're going to watch some others having a ride today," the Little Black Clock said.

There was the greatest excitement going on. Men and women and children, dressed very strangely in the skins of animals, were laughing and shouting with delight.

In the center of an open space was one of the queerest looking carts either of the children had ever seen, and a team of oxen was drawing the cart.

"It moves! It goes!" they shouted. "The wheel moves."

"You see," explained the Little Black Clock, "a wheel has just been made that will turn around, and this is the very first kind of a wagon ever to go. You're seeing the very beginning of travel."

And John and Peggy watched the excited people, the crude cart, the funny old oxen, and said to the Little Black Clock:

"This is certainly great."

THE NEBBS—Merry Christmas?

Little Yarns of Yuletide.

Santa Claus was getting ready now.

SANTA'S CHRISTMAS EVE

By Mary Graham Bonner.

(Author of "Sundown Stories", a Regular Feature in Mail Tribune)

The toys were all ready.

They were sitting, waiting, on long tables in Santa's workshop.

How proud they were! No less a person than Santa Claus had made them. It was enough to make any toy proud.

Outside it was snowing. Snowflakes were flying about, running races with the wind. The reindeer were waiting. How loyal Santa Claus was to them! Even though there were times when he left them for a few hours while he made longer distances by airplane, still they pulled his wonderful old sleigh across the sparkling snow from town and even over the roofs.

He would be starting with them soon. Were they not all ready with their bells jingling? They liked to hear the sounds of the bells and so they moved about, letting the bells tinkle merrily in the cold, frosty air.

Santa Claus was getting ready now. There was no moment quite like it in all the year.

There were the jolly times when he was rushing, rushing, rushing, finishing toy animals and dolls, and painting splendid names on sleds, and when he was down on the floor of his own workshop making certain that the electric trains would go around on their tracks and stop only when they had finished their journeys.

There were the cheery times when he would sit, after the day's toy making was finished, and read letters from toys and girls all over the world. How he loved his letters! How carefully he kept track of any changes in their addresses! How he kept adding to his great and mighty lists—the longest lists in all the world—as they wrote him of other presents they would so love to have.

Oh, yes, all those times were wonderful. But there was no moment in all the moments in all the year that could be compared to the one that came just as he was getting ready to leave.

Now Santa Claus was putting on his great red coat and tying the sash around his waist. And now he was putting the toys into his huge, huge pack.

The toys heard the muffled sounds of the bells from the reins of the reindeer and they heard that dear, jolly old voice saying:

"Christmas Eve has come at last. They'll be waiting for me. Let's hurry, hurry to them!"

His voice sounded a little muffled, too, for of course the toys were in the pack and they couldn't hear as well as though they had been outside.

The toys in the pack were talking together softly, wondering where they were going, whether they would hang from trees, or see their owners for the first time as they peeped from the tops of stockings, or whether they would be wrapped in paper and placed under Christmas trees.

"Do you think I will be loved?" the little white lamb whispered.

"I'm sure of it," said the bear.

"We're arriving somewhere!" the elephant shouted.

It was Santa's first stop.

And, as he lifted some of the toys from the pack, he said:

"My, but I'm glad I'm Santa Claus. I certainly never, never will change places with any one."

And the bells on the reindeer tinkled gaily, and the toys in the pack squealed little happy squeaks and the snowflakes stopped falling to see what was going on, and the stars came out until the whole sky was crowded with them, for Santa Claus was celebrating Christmas Eve!

Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to law, the Oregon State Board of Aeronautics has prepared, and the Governor of the State of Oregon has approved, the following rules and regulations respecting the operation in Oregon of airplanes which are not licensed or authorized to be operated by the federal government:

1. All airplanes operating in the State of Oregon, not otherwise federally licensed, must have in addition to their state registration, an airworthiness certificate issued by the Oregon State Board of Aeronautics. This airworthiness certificate shall state the purpose for which the airplane is being operated; that is, whether it be operated commercially, or for experimental flying.

2. Airplanes manufactured under approved type certificate issued by the Department of Commerce, or planes eligible for Department of Commerce license for commercial use, will be issued an airworthiness certificate if found in safe flying condition. Other aircraft will be issued an airworthiness certificate after having successfully passed engineering flight tests, the same as adopted by the Department of Commerce, and other engineering tests, to-wit: A sand load test of 60 per cent of the design load as determined by the Department of Commercial load factor curves, or, the above may be omitted at the option of the State Board upon submission of complete stress analysis on the airplane.

3. A new application for an airworthiness certificate for any plane may be made after such certificate has been denied, whenever the plane has been placed in an airworthy condition.

4. If at any time when any airplane is being flown and is found not to comply with the foregoing rules, the airworthiness certificate then outstanding shall be cancelled by the Board.

5. In the event of accidental damage to any aircraft operated under an airworthiness certificate, the owner of such aircraft shall make a complete report to the Oregon State Board of Aeronautics at the Port of Portland Airport, Portland, Oregon, and if, in the judgment of the State Board the damage is of a major nature, the Board may, at its option, cancel the airworthy certificate until repairs have been made and inspected satisfactory to the Board.

6. Any inspection provided for in these rules shall be made by the Board of Aeronautics, or by any representative authorized by said Board.

7. Flying any airplane for which a certificate provided for in these rules, or a federal license, has not been issued and then in force, or failure to comply with any requirement of these rules, by any pilot, shall be deemed carelessness or negligence in endangering the safety of the public in the flying of aircraft sufficient to constitute cause for the revocation of such pilot's license.

These rules and regulations are hereby prepared and adopted this 25th day of November, 1929.

OREGON STATE BOARD OF AERONAUTICS.
By Archie F. Ruth, Chairman.
By J. L. Morrow, Acting Secretary.
