Warner Baxter Star of Craterian Film

A different Baxter this from the Spanish-American gallant in "Romance of the Rio Grande," or the glib, drawing Cisco Kid of "In Old Arizona." Not the southwest, but Europe supplies a background for his new adventures. He plays the role of a great financier in a tale of love and thwarted suicide, a story based on the exciting demise of Lowenstein, the Belgian money king.

Not that the gauche and homely playmate played by Baxter in "Such Men Are Dangerous," which comes to the Fox Craterian theater tomorrow, actually dies in his leap from an airplane over the English channel. The suicide gesture is prompted by consciousness of his physical ugliness, and of the fact that women seek him out only for his money. But in this story the crooked seeks out the aid of a plastic surgeon, who transforms him into a handsome specimen of manhood.

Thus he returns "from the dead" minus his old sense of inferiority, suave and attractive enough to pay successful court to the woman who has scorned him. Opposite Baxter will be seen Catherine Dale Owen.

REV. C. H. PATTON WILL SPEAK HERE AT PRESBYTERIAN

Rev. Cornelius H. Patton, D.D., secretary emeritus of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, writer and speaker of distinction, who will be in the city to deliver the Sunday morning sermon at the First Presbyterian church in Medford.

De. Patton's books on missionary work are widely read and used by mission study movements. He is a life trustee of Amherst college, and also a trustee of the recently combined Sofia American schools in Bulgaria. People of Medford are fortunate in being given an opportunity to hear his message Sunday.

He is a graduate of Amherst and Yale Divinity school and before taking up his work with the American board he held pastorates in New Jersey, Missouri and Minnesota.

Among the books he has written are "Eight O'clock Chapel," "The Rosary," a study in the prayer life of the nations, "Foreign Missions Under Fire," "The Lure of Africa" and "World Facts and America's Responsibility."

CENTRAL POINT GRANGE HEARS OLD TIME VIOLIN DURING LECTURE HOUR

(By E. H. Strohmeyer.)

CENTRAL POINT, Ore., May 6.—(Special.)—Central Point Grange met May 3rd, but on account of the gentle rain not so many were out as heretofore. Those who were absent missed hearing an old friend of the Cliff Smith family, S. H. Coe of Ames, Iowa, give a few numbers of old-time fiddle music. Mr. Coe, 77 years of age, and his fiddle which is over 100 years old, had some interested listeners.

The lecture hour included the following:

Song, Tyrell sisters; song, "You Tell Me Your Dream and I'll Tell You Mine," Miss Ella Anderson and Miss Lucille Hoover; short talk by Galner on newspaper work; school song; 10th Anderson; song, "I'm a Dreamer" and "Your Mother and Mine"; Mrs. Mildred Gregory; recitation, "When Angelina a Shopping Goes," Francis Benson; songs, "Memory Lane" and "Pagan Love Song," Miss Alberta Bonney; fiddle, S. R. Coe.

Grange was then taken up and a few more applied for membership.

H. C. Westorf has been on the sick list and Master Anderson visited as to his marriage, and said "H. C." told him so.

Will Foley told a nice communication to the Grange in thanks for flowers and kindness.

State convention preparations are being made now for the 1931 convention in Jackson county.

Each member is requested to pay 50 cents toward the purchase of a range.

Two songs that were overlooked were then rendered by Miss Eula Benson.

With a few inside remarks from some of our most worthy members the Grange came to a close and refreshments were served.

Music Week Talkie Featured at Rialto

A subtle, sympathetic, soul-stirring musical epic with jazz and the classics skillfully blended will be unfolded on the screen when "The Melody Man," all talking musical drama with William Collier, Jr., Alice Day and John St. John, comes to the Fox Rialto theater tomorrow.

The underlying motive is a conflict of age with youth—the former in the guise of an old musician who loves the music of the old masters; the latter, a youthful leader of a jazz band. A beautiful romance is built up around the old musician's daughter and the youthful Paul Whiteman. Conflict arises with the old man's unreasonable hatred for anything that is even remotely identified with the jazz that he hates. Still another plot is furnished by the crime that the old musician had committed at the very apex of his career in Vienna. His musical genius eventually betrays him.
