WHO SAID CHANNEL?—You can't frighten Marjorie Elaine Best, above, two-year-old Detroit mermaid, by mentioning the English Channel, because she's going to swim it some day. Elaine has just returned from Florida, where she won the Barnes Newberry Cup for her swimming exhibitions.

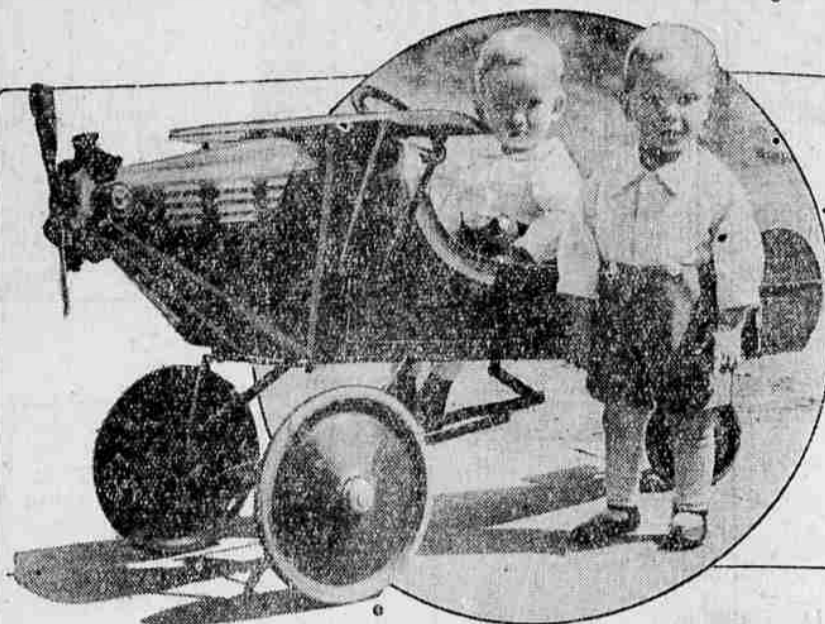

HARD-BOILED—That's the way the eggs are, and cute Joan Davis is wondering what to do with them now that Easter is over. Joan is the daughter of Secretary of Labor James J. Davis.

A GREEN REDHEAD is pretty Miss Eleanor Hunt, above, who, although she has never been in a movie, has been selected to play the principal role in a forthcoming talkie. Eleanor is 20 and red-haired.

"NOTHING LIKE BEING AIR-MINDED THESE DAYS," say William and John Robinson, of Akron, O., who are pictured in the upper right photo just before taking off for a little ground experience. The reason William is putting at the controls is that the propeller is on the blink again. Across the sea aviation is taking hold on the citizenry, as the lower right photo will testify. Owners of model airplanes are shown competing their planes at the Wimbledon Common, London, for the annual Challenge trophy. To show what a whale of a difference a few years make, the two girls, lower left, dressed as "Spirits of Aviation," sit at the wheel of a car which was the speediest form of transportation known in 1906. They appeared at the Tri-State Aircraft Show at Camden, N. J. Just above is America's largest flying boat, the Commodore, a 20-passenger plane built for the New York, Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires Line.

THEY'RE ON THE RIGHT TRACK and off to a fine start, too. These seven co-eds took part in the annual interclass athletic meet of the University of Pennsylvania at Franklin Field, Philadelphia. With the smoke of the starter's gun still visible, notice that each of the runners has left her mark at the same time.

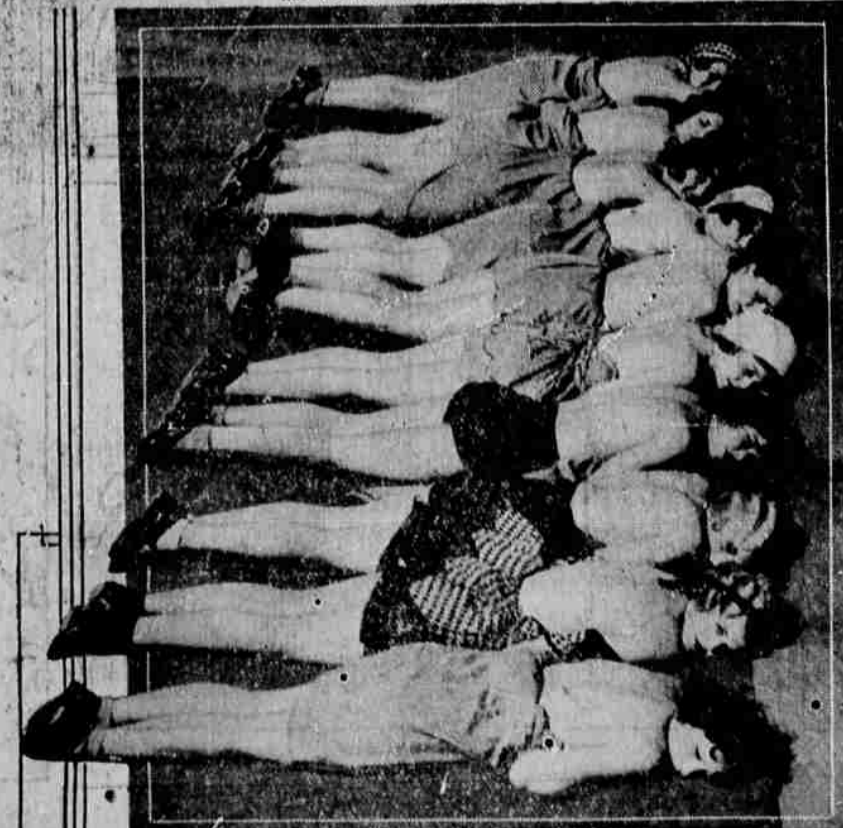

QUEEN—At the University of Pennsylvania, the students of architecture, who know a thing or two about design, chose Mrs. G. Favorite, above, of Philadelphia, to be "Queen Zarina" at their annual pageant.

AMERICA'S MOST FAMILIAR RANGE, changing each year as its jagged peaks reach for the sky, is shown here as it now looks from an airplane. The ship plowing up the harbor in the foreground is the new $3,500,000 Santa Clara, said to be the fastest passenger freight liner built in the United States.

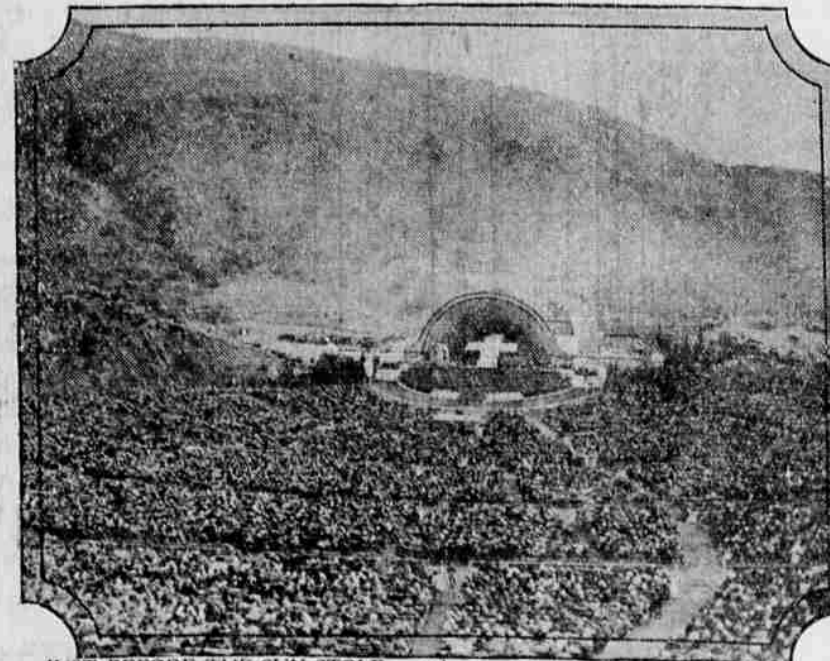

"WHOA, THARI!"—Helen Meany, above, fancy diving champion, seems to enjoy bucking the waves on this aquaplane while a speedboat pulls it at a snappy clip through the waters of Rye Beach, N. Y.

"PARDON OUR BACKS," say these chorus girls as they find relief on the roof of a talkie studio at Hollywood following a hot session before the camera. Really, we don't know what these girls will do when we get some real hot weather.

FAIR REDSKIN—Many an Indian would have happily bit the dust for a squaw as charming as Loretta Young, movie actress, who is shown here in her version of Pocahontas.

JUST BEFORE THE SUN STOLE over the mountains surrounding the Hollywood Bowl, more than 10,000 worshippers gathered there to participate in the world's largest Easter Sunrise services. A feature of the services was the singing of the great choir, visible in the form of a cross on the stage of the theater in the background.

KING—As fine a heel clicker and saber clanker as any soldier in the Spanish army is Alonso, King of Spain, who is shown here standing at attention during a religious ceremony.
