COUNTRY FOLKS FROWN ON SITE CONSTROVERSIES

Want Medford to Keep Promise to Abide By Selection of County Court. Consider Petition to Move Courthouse Back to Jacksonville.

Residents of the rural districts of Jackson county, view with alarm the prospect of legal civil war in this city over the selection of a courthouse site, and according to Herman Offenbacher of the Appellate section have taken preliminary steps to stop it, by considering calling for a vote to move the courthouse back to Jacksonville, unless peace abides.

Medford agreed to give a site for the courthouse, and to abide by the selection of the county court, said Mr. Offenbacher yesterday. "Now they are getting ready to fight among themselves, with injunctions and petitions. The people in the country think Medford ought to keep their word, and do as she said she would do."

He also said, the rural districts opposed the county mixing in a purely civic battle, and many voted for the courthouse change, with the specific understanding and promises made by local civic leaders, there would be no controversy over the site, and that the selection of the county court would be accepted as final and definite.

Mr. Offenbacher said he had heard that a petition was being circulated asking that the courthouse be removed to Jacksonville, if legal warfare broke out over the site selection. He thought the petitions were being held in abeyance, for future use, but not certain.

County officials who come in daily contact with country residents said they had heard considerable dissatisfaction over the prospects of a legal battle, and heard: "Are we going to be another Klamath county?" Klamath built three courthouses, and "laved" ten years, before they finally reached a decision.

A petition to remove the courthouse, from Medford back to Jacksonville, would require 1500 names, and could be placed on the general election ballot next November.

A circular entitled, "The truth about the Courthouse," was distributed in the business district Saturday afternoon by Attorney W. E. Phipps. It sets forth three reasons why the Washington street site should not be selected, and eight reasons why the armory site should be selected. The circular is signed by E. E. Kelly, 911 Queen Ann avenue; W. E. Phipps, 1229 North Riverside; J. H. Butler, 916 East Main; R. E. Strang, 1109 East Main; P. C. Digham, 502 North Grape; M. Purdin, 912 North Central; and May 12.
