Angora Museum Guards Objects Believed Used By Vanished Hittites 6,900 Years Ago.

ANGORA, Turkey (AP)—American money and science are helping to make the new Angora ethnographical museum an important link in the chain of evidence that points to a nation that disappeared 6,900 years ago. This uncompleted museum guards the hundreds of relics which the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago has been excavating in Asia Minor in an effort to solve the historical puzzle of the Hittites, a Biblical people known to have existed 5,000 years before the Christian era, but whose civilization and whose fate are hidden in undeciphered hieroglyphics. Under Dr. Van der Osten, the Oriental Institute will begin this spring its fourth year of field explorations in Alshir, near Angora. As in the past, the expedition will turn over to the Angora museum all its finds, and the museum, in turn, will present to the Americans any objects found in duplicates. Funds for these explorations, which cost annually about $50,000, are supplied by the general education board of New York, plus contributions made by such individuals as Mrs. W. Murray Crane, wife of the senator from Massachusetts; Henry J. Patten and James A. Patten and Frank G. Logan of Chicago. The Angora museum's chronologically arranged displays of relics render strikingly apparent the lasting influence of the lost race. The shapes and designs of Hittite implements are identical with Turkish implements of recent centuries. The Hittite double-headed eagle appears on Turkish silver snuff boxes, and the exact likeness of the Hittite goddess of Plenty appears on the Turkish amulet.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR OF PRESBYTERIAN TO GIVE PAGEANT

A pageant, "Jewels From Every Land," will be presented by the Junior Endeavor society of the Presbyterian church Sunday evening, May 25. A large map of the world comes to life before a boy (Harvey Field) who is studying his geography lesson and it reveals to him the customs, habits, trials, and tribulations of the countries represented. The following juniors represent the different countries: China (Plum Blossom), Gene Porter; Japan (Cherry Blossom), Mary Cummings; Syria (Achmed) Robert Littrell; Siam, (Sawat), Dor Barrett; India (Sita), Betty Dymann; Africa (Zulu), Bobby Dymann; Mexico (Maria), Amy Elliott. Other juniors taking part in the program are Marion Littrell, Betty Vilna, Jeanette Fields, and Lois Littrell. A lovely chest, filled with gifts, will be on display. It is to be sent to the director of the bureau of education at Manila, Philippine Islands, to be distributed among the children there, for the purpose of promoting good will and friendship between the children of the United States and those of the Philippine Islands. The High School Girls' club will make this pageant very effective by their participation. The girls' chorus of the church will also sing. Both of these groups are under the direction of Miss Margaret Arnold.

London Cathedral Ready For Rededication Service

An idea of the extensive repairs and restorations to the interior of St. Paul's cathedral, London, is given at the left. At the right workmen are putting pure gold leaf on the cross atop the lofty dome.

LONDON.—(AP)—St. Paul's cathedral will be reopened on June 25, in the presence of the king and queen. The huge church was built at a cost of $29,000,000, raised largely by a tax on coal entering the port of London. Its foundations are only four and a half feet deep. Beneath them are six feet of earth and below that a bed of wet sand 20 feet deep. The dome alone weighs 68,000 tons. It is supported by eight hollow piers and in the course of the centuries it has tilted dangerously, almost six inches out of plumb. That movement has not entirely ceased, but the building is now considered safe. Most striking sight in the renovated cathedral is the glitter of mosaics which had been dimmed by the fastidious age-washers through the centuries.

Murder at High Tide

By CHARLES G. BOOTH. Synopsis: The murderer of Dan Parados—who is left? Repeatedly in his household at horror had a possible motive. Antole Fligue, a French detective, searches the quarters of Lum We, Parados' Chinese cook. It is discovered that Lum We stole a jade pendant, the baby goddess of Parados, in a room. Parados had forbidden him to leave the house and had broken the rock's prized ancestral tablet. Lum We, armed with a butcher knife, tries to attack Fligue for invading his room, but a blow from Antole Fligue tells the cook to the stick of iron. Lum We admits stealing the pendant. Despite his denial of the murder, he is convicted by Samuels, deputy attorney.

Chapter 21 CAROLINE'S LOGIC

DOUBTED that Samuels was as sure of himself as he pretended to be about Lum We's guilt. "Does monsieur forget those others?" Fligue inquired. "The little mademoiselle, M. Annersley and Mlle. Jabrius, le Balafre and Cleon Bac, Grainger and M. le Professeur? And has not Grainger to be about Lum We's guilt. "We've caught Grainger in two lies already," Samuels replied hotly. "I've a notion Lum We and he are in this business together." "But consider, my friend," Fligue continued earnestly. "We are not sure this is the big mystery. You will confine Lum We, that is proper, but do not officially charge him with the crime until we have—how you say?—investigated further."

"You're probably right," Samuels grunted. "I guess we can lock him up in that garage downstairs." He removed the handcuffs from Lum We's wrists. "I am honored that Mr. Samuels condescends to believe me," Lum We purred, bowing. "I don't," Samuels assured him emphatically. "This house is crazy, and I'm giving you your chance with the rest of the crowd, that's all. Get along!"

The north end of the building, walled off from the garage, served as power house and workshop. Its three windows made it impossible for our purpose. Lum We himself solved our problem. "If Mr. Samuels will condescend to look at the south wall he will reveal a small door," Lum We informed us with a benign smile. The south wall was in shadow, and we had not noticed the door. Samuels approached it suspiciously, appreciating the novelty of a prisoner discovering his own jail.

"What's the idea?" Samuels asked. "Mr. Samuels will consider it an ample security for my miserable carcass," the Chinaman explained blandly. The door opened into a small square room with cement walls, floor and ceiling. A single window, so small that even Lum We could not have crawled through it, shed dingy light upon a cobwebby accumulation of old trunks and furniture. The door was of two inch pine. Samuels, still suspicious, thumped upon the walls and eyed the window.

"A veritable dungeon!" Fligue exclaimed. We backed out, leaving Lum We behind, and Samuels slammed the door. He swung the hasp over and ran one of his handcuffs through the staple, securing the door. "That'll hold him," Samuels said. "And now monsieur will resume his search for the shoe that trod that blackness into the carpet, eh?" Fligue chuckled. "First the little mysteries, then the big mystery. That is the way of life, is it not?"

Samuels muttered one of his impressions and took himself off. "What next?" I inquired of Fligue. "To think and to act, mon ami, that is the sum of achievement, yes? I shall think, and you, M. l'Antiquaire, shall find the pretty mademoiselle. It is well that I am not 20 years younger. Run along, my little one."

You soon lose touch with the ardencies of youth in the antique business, and I hurried off feeling ridiculously juvenile. Caroline had said she would be up on the slope and I followed the path that ran along the edge of the Gut. It was apparent at a glance that the Gut could not be crossed, except perhaps at very low tide, as Professor Johns and Hendricks had said. Even now it was impassable. Tawny waters hissed violently into secret caverns. No one crossed it during the hour in which Parados was killed. Of that I was certain.

The Gut was curved like a scimitar, its point extending southward. A half mile of brick walking had brought me almost to the apex of the Gut. Chaparral clad the trail on either side of the slope, but as I drew near to the bluff it thinned down to solitary clumps of ilac or backthorn. "Such a lovely morning to be lazy," Caroline said. "How did you manage to get away from that funny Mr. Fligue?"

Caroline's warm voice came from behind a thicket of backthorn to my left. I found her sitting against a eucalyptus tree with a book on her lap and that bantering look I loved in her eyes. "He told me to come and find you," I laughed, dropping beside her. "That was nice of him. Isn't it gorgeous up here? I could almost forget that horrible affair ever happened."

"That was my thought when you spoke," I said. "You feel as though you had come up out of something corrupt." Caroline's eyes sparkled. "You are such a refreshing young man, Mr. Hunt." "That's interesting. In what way?" "How old are you?" "Thirty—almost." "Heavens! Whoever heard of a man of that age being in the antique business? I thought they were all 60 at least, and wore beards like Victorian scientists and editorial writers."

"You think my profession has aged me, then?" "I was sitting on the grass at her feet, my face on a level with hers, and I knew I had never seen anything quite so satisfactory as the picture she made. "I'm not so sure now," she informed me meditatively. "I thought you were old—inside, I mean—but you are not, I suppose it's that thin dark, wry look you have." Suddenly she was laughing at me, little crinkles tugging devastatingly at the corners of her eyes and mouth. "M. l'Antiquaire," she declared, "you are younger than you were last night. I don't believe you are more than 16."

"Well," I grinned. "I've been through a good deal since last night." Her eyes darkened and I regretted the reference I had made. "So have I," she replied soberly. "You must have a good deal to tell me."
