

Toads and Mice Toted to School Show Trend of Modern Education

DENVER, Colo., May 29.—(AP)—Bad boys who bring toads, mice and snakes into the school room may be a terror to the teacher, but they are voicing the trend of modern education, in the view of their champion, Dr. Randall J. Condon, of Friendship, Maine, member of the congress of parents and teachers and speaker at their convention here.

"We should bring the life of the community into the school room," said Dr. Condon. "For years we thought we would shut the school and teacher off in a corner where they would work out their problems in a special nook set aside for them. That is not progress."

"The boy who brings a toad into the school is all right. We should have more such boys. They are getting life into the school room." Speaking of the increasing tendency toward vocational education, Dr. Condon believes that vocational and so-called cultural education are not at loggerheads and that ideal instruction strikes a medium ground. A dinner honoring Mrs. Hugh Bradford of Sacramento, Cal., newly elected president of the national congress, and other officers, was set for tonight, which will close the convention proper.

MORROW IN LAUDATION OF HOOVER

Crash in Security Values Found President Well Equipped to Deal With Emergency — Deserves Gratitude of County.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 30. (AP)—Speaking of the present economic period as a "time of serious emergency," Dwight W. Morrow, candidate for the republican senate nomination, lauded President Hoover late yesterday in a campaign address and expressed faith in the ability of the American people to wrest a prosperous tomorrow from the "bad times" of today.

He praised the president for his "constructive action," and said complete cure lay with the businessmen themselves.

"After all is said and done," he declared, "the most effective cure for bad times rests with business men themselves. There is no substitute for individual initiative, for individual faith, for individual courage."

Recalling that it was President Hoover, then secretary of commerce, who advocated the conference on unemployment in 1921, Morrow said that "when the crash in security values came last fall" Mr. Hoover was unusually well equipped to deal with the emergency.

"President Hoover," he said, "deserves and will receive the gratitude of this country for his constructive action in a time of serious emergency. . . . As a result of his leadership thousands of men have been working during the past six months who otherwise might have remained idle."

OFFENSIVE SIGN NEAR G. PASS IS HIT BY COURIER

Effort to Route Southbound Traffic Via Redwood Highway Condemned in Climate City.

Commenting on the reports reaching Medford that a sign had been erected on the Pacific highway south of Medford and suggesting the use of the Redwood highway for California bound tourists, the Grants Pass Courier yesterday ran a news story and an editorial concerning the sign. Efforts to locate it were unsuccessful.

The local detour will be in use for at least another month, and, while not in the best condition, it is easily passable and takes motorists through a choice bit of orchard and farming land.

Action of the Grants Pass chamber of commerce to locate the sign and remove it, and similar action by highway officials located there, have brought commendation from Medford citizens and residents of the county.

Editorially the paper comments: "Report from Medford that someone north of Grants Pass has placed a sign on the highway advising tourists to avoid the Pacific highway south of Medford because of the rough detour through the beautiful orchard land brought an immediate response here."

"Traffic officers set out immediately to locate the offending sign and its owner, with the suggestion of the Grants Pass chamber of commerce that the sign be removed."

"The incident is important in showing other sections of southern Oregon that this county is not in the business of directing traffic to the detriment of its neighbors."

Unauthorized acts like that of erecting the reported sign create bad feeling which cannot be tolerated with southern Oregon on the verge of its industrial rebirth through the co-operation of all its sections in the Northern California Southern Oregon development association."

The news article is as follows:

"Hunt for a reported highway sign north of Grants Pass was started Thursday morning by State Traffic Officer Hubert Hoxie of this city. The sign was reported in a news dispatch from Medford."

"According to the report, the sign advises tourists to avoid the detour south of Medford through the orchard tract between that city and Ashland. The detour is made necessary because of the rebuilding of the Pacific highway with new surface and concrete shoulders."

"Thursday afternoon no report of the sign's discovery had been made to the Grants Pass chamber of commerce, which suggested its removal if found."

The Baby Teeth.

The baby teeth are all there at birth just below the gum, although you cannot see them. The roots are not entirely formed; but the crowns of the teeth, the part which will eventually show in the mouth, are completely formed and are waiting for the time when the child is developed enough to use them, then the roots develop and the crown of the tooth is pushed up through the gum and we get our first glimpse of baby's teeth.

The time of the eruption of the deciduous, or baby, teeth varies greatly, owing to the development of that part of the body; usually the first tooth appears from five to eight months after birth.

One of the front teeth (central incisors) is the first tooth to appear, and usually within the next two months all four front teeth have arrived—two upper and two lower.

When the front teeth are in place, those on each side will soon show up. These usually erupt anywhere from the seventh to ninth month. These eight incisors—four upper and four lower—usually do not cause much disturbance to the child while they are coming through the gums, because of their knife-like or cutting shape.

The first temporary molars—pre-molars as they are usually called—(there are no bicuspids in the first set of teeth) generally appear by the end of the first year.

The cuspid teeth, or eye teeth, as they are sometimes called, erupt about the 18th month. They push their way through the gum between the lateral incisor and the first pre-molar.

The second pre-molars arrive usually about the third year. This makes 20 deciduous, or baby, teeth, which is all of the temporary teeth.

When the baby is one year old, he should have 12 teeth; and it is about this time that he should have his first toothbrush and his training in the care of his mouth and teeth should begin. Keep them just as white and shiny as when they first appeared. The child soon becomes accustomed to having his teeth brushed after each meal, and as he grows this routine will become a part of his life. He should be encouraged as early as possible to brush his own teeth and so create the habit at an early age.

A great many people do not believe that it is necessary to care for the baby teeth because, so they reason, the child will soon lose them and gain a good set of teeth in their stead.

This mistaken conception has caused a great deal of unnecessary suffering and serious after results that could have been prevented so easily.

Of course the baby teeth will all be gone, usually by the time the child is 12 years of age, but the fact that these teeth were put there for a purpose and that some of them are going to stay even that long makes it necessary that we make every effort to keep them as healthy and free from decay as possible.

Aside from this, the premature loss of one of these little teeth results oftentimes in a serious deformity of the face and jaws as well as a serious crippling of the child's chewing machinery at a time in his life when it is most vitally needed.

PORTLAND LOSES MILLION DOLLARS IN POOR SECURITY

PORTLAND, Ore., May 29.—(AP)—The George Black & Company, auditors, announced today that in the first complete annual audit of city affairs in many years they had discovered a book shortage of $1,000,000 in improvement bond sinking fund and warrants that probably were valueless.

Against this shortage, however, it was pointed out, the city had collected $1,500,000 from the sale of 2009 of the 12,000 lots it has taken over for delinquent assessments and it now has property worth $1,650,000.

Various criticisms of the operation of city departments were offered in the report by the auditing company, but the statement was qualified with "but most of these have been corrected."
