SEASONING WITH SALT AND SUGAR SHARPENS APPETITES. Meat and Vegetable Dishes Thus Seasoned Have New Taste-appeal. Tempting the appetite does not necessarily call for the serving of rare delicacies or laboring with difficult recipes. The most simple foods can be made inviting if only their distinctive flavors are emphasized. The cook who experiments with sugar and salt in seasoning foods will be amazed at the delicious results in vegetables, meat stews and soups. Salt by itself only overcomes flatness. The addition of sugar, however, brings out the flavor as no other ingredient can. A dash of sugar to a pinch of salt is the basic rule for seasoning meat and vegetable dishes. For the sake of convenience many cooks keep a mixture of sugar and salt within reach. Some prefer equal parts—some mix two parts sugar to one of salt, or the reverse. When food pleases the appetite, there is a keen desire to eat more of it. As a result of this increased consumption the system gets its full requirements of vitamins, minerals, roughage and calories. Most foods are more delicious and nourishing with sugar. The Sugar Institute.
