

FRENCH MEDICS DOWN TZE-TZE FLY IN AFRICA

Carrier of Sleeping Sickness Germ in Losing Battle With Modern Science—Thousands Saved.

AYOS, Cameroon, Central Africa—(AP)—The tze-tze fly, carrier of the terrible sleeping sickness germ has been fought to a standstill by a little group of doctors who are given credit for saving hundreds of thousands of lives in this French mandated territory.

Dr. Jamlot, former chief of the Pasteur Institute at Brazzaville in the French Congo, for several years has worked with such success that he feels sleeping sickness mortality has been reduced to what might be called normal proportions for this country. His aim now is to stamp it out.

When France, after the war, took over this German colony, sleeping sickness was spreading and in one district there were 200,000 deaths. In another district 40,000 square miles, there still are 350,000 persons affected.

Dr. Jamlot with a group of French doctors, has trained a native staff so that the white man's capacity is multiplied many times.

A school to train natives to fight the disease, furnishes men and ple things needed to be done.

The French doctors diagnose the disease as the natives file by them and, with chalk, mark on the natives' chests the treatment to be given. Those who come from distant villages, return to their homes, where trained natives continue the treatment.

The microscope plays a big part in the work and a dozen natives have been trained to operate the instrument.

The Prevention of Constipation in Children.

Constipation develops in children generally because of neglect of the proper diet, and sometimes from the use of cathartics.

To prevent constipation, a child should be trained to have:

1. A regular time for going to the toilet each day. Just after breakfast is best. Be sure that he has time after breakfast to have his bowel movement. Be sure he goes every day at the regular time whether or not he feels the need, and be sure that he never puts off the need at other times.
2. A diet containing enough laxative foods and not too much constipating foods. This does not mean a strict special diet, but simply the ordinary diet which is good for any child. Be sure that his meals are regular, and that the child does not eat between meals.
3. No medicine unless absolutely necessary and only on the advice of your physician. The proper diet will take place of medicine. Giving laxatives, enemas, and particularly patent medicines, simply relieves the child for a short time, but does not prevent or cure constipation.

To prevent constipation:

1. In the breast fed baby—
 - a. See that the mother is not constipated.
 - b. See that the baby gets boiled water between nursings.
 - c. See that the baby gets orange juice or prune juice and cereals as soon as he is old enough.
 - d. Be sure that the baby is getting enough food from the breast. Have him weighed regularly to see if he gains. Perhaps he needs more food. The baby should nurse one breast at each feeding until it is drained, and both breasts only if necessary to supply more food.

2. In the bottle fed baby—
 - a. Be sure that the baby is getting the right kind of mixture in the bottle and enough of it. Ask your doctor.
 - b. See that he gets enough water between bottles.
 - c. See that he gets orange juice or prune juice, and solid foods as soon as he is old enough. Be sure that both breast fed and bottle fed babies are fed at regular times, not less than three hours apart.
 3. In the younger children—
 - a. See that the child doesn't get too much milk—but, a child can and should take at least three glasses a day if the other food is of the right kind.
 - b. Give more solid food such as bran, cereals, especially oatmeal, or such as crackers, vegetables in thick soups, cooked fruits, raw fruits (only after three years, except scraped apple).
 - c. Give two to four glasses of water a day between meals.
 4. In older children—
 - a. Give less starchy food.
 - b. Give coarse cereals—whole wheat bread, bran, oatmeal, etc.
 - c. Give milk, but not over four glasses a day.
 - d. Give fresh fruit and vegetables.
 - e. Give cooked prunes, dates and figs.
 - f. Give water before breakfast and three to four glasses during the day.

Be sure that the child gets enough exercise and fresh air so that he can digest his food.

SAMS VALLEY SCRIBE ENJOYS GRANGE TRIP

SAMS VALLEY, Ore., June 20.—(Special.) Absence of the Sams Valley items last week was due to the correspondent being at the Oregon State Grange session at Redmond, a week grange enjoyed both in attending a week state grange for the first time, and in getting acquainted with a country so vastly different from the Rogue River valley.

From first impression Rogue River valley people wonder how any one will choose to live in a section like Redmond, after once being acquainted with the Rogue River valley, but later learn there are advantages there, and Redmond is a thriving little town, with a chamber of commerce, ever alert to the needs of the farming class, who practically make the town.

Diamond Lake-Dalles-California highway will be surveyed by J. R. Sargent, engineer for federal bureau of public roads.
