

A NICE GIRL COMES TO TOWN

By Myrtle Greig

SYNOPSIS: The excitement over the arrival of Mary Lou Louie and Brynmar Whitman hits the town the very night when Mary Lou comes to town. Brynmar says her too much of a "nice girl" since she has become acquainted with Tony Titherington, a wealthy young aviator who promises to show her the town in case of Brynmar's indifference. Brynmar is not aware of Tony's identity. Seeing a light in the window at ten o'clock in the morning, Brynmar enters to find her with a man whom she introduces as Freddy Wilson. Her out-of-town cousin, Brynmar immediately takes a dislike to him, especially when he tells her that he is Mr. Titherington. "You've no alternative, you've got to consent," Brynmar can't figure what he meant.

Chapter 7

NEW CLOTHES

The next afternoon Mary Lou stood in the little fitting room of Jay's exclusive gown shop. Jay had promised to fit her out in the latest creations so she might travel in Tony Titherington's set without the embarrassment that was sure to result if she wore her home-made dresses from Friewood.

She stood before the mirror in a two-piece suit of fashionable Italian blue. The color looked striking on the cool blondness of Mary Lou.

"It is awfully nice," she murmured.

"And it was. Trust Jay for that. The dress was gorgeous, girlish, demure. The coat was face cloth, slightly sophisticated, perfect in line with a flair in front and a soft silver fox collar. There was a small felt hat to go with it."

She turned to Jay, laughing. "I never meant to take it, I can't afford it, really. But now I've seen it on me, I couldn't bear not to have it."

"Bless you, of course you're to have it," smiled Jay. "Don't bother about the expense. I'll give you trade prices and you can have your whole life to repay. Now for an evening gown. And undies. . . . We consider them as important as the frocks, you know. A divine creation can be ruined if the slip doesn't fit."

"I'm going to try a golden picture gown on you. Most blonds wouldn't dare to wear it, and that's all to the good. Never wear colors that obviously suit you, especially not at night."

So Jay talked, sitting on the arm of the chair, smoking a cigarette, while an assistant brought in the golden frock. It was the sort of gown Mary Lou never would have dared to buy for herself. There was a subtle suggestion of wickedness to it.

She commented on this to Jay. "I didn't believe you'd get it, but you're right," Jay laughed. "One should look the least bit wicked at night."

By this time the assistant had the golden gown slipped over Mary Lou's head. Again Jay had been right. It was the new Mary Lou who had come to the last night.

"Now you're set," said Jay. "And I must go back to my monthly accounts, drat 'em." She walked toward the door. "By the way, when is Mr. Tony Titherington taking you out?"

Mary Lou said she didn't know. He hadn't phoned before she left the flat.

"Better call him, child. Don't let the grass grow under your feet." "Do you think I could phone him, Jay? I thought, if a girl chased a man, that he lost all interest in her."

"Archaic notions," Jay smiled. "Nowadays girls call up men as often as they choose. No one thinks anything of it."

Mary Lou admitted it. All the same she had a shaky feeling when she gave Tony's number to an indifferent operator.

"Mr. Titherington?" she faltered, when a male voice replied. She had called him Tony last night.

"No," answered the male voice. "This is not Mr. Titherington. It is Wallis, his man, speaking. If you will kindly hold the line I will see if Mr. Titherington is in."

Mary Lou half hoped the man would come back to say Tony was out. Nerve-racking possibilities floated through her mind. Tony might have forgotten all about her. He might. . . .

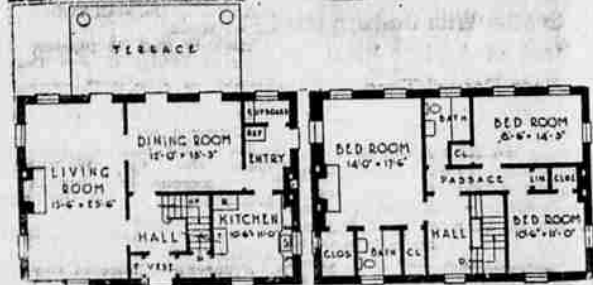

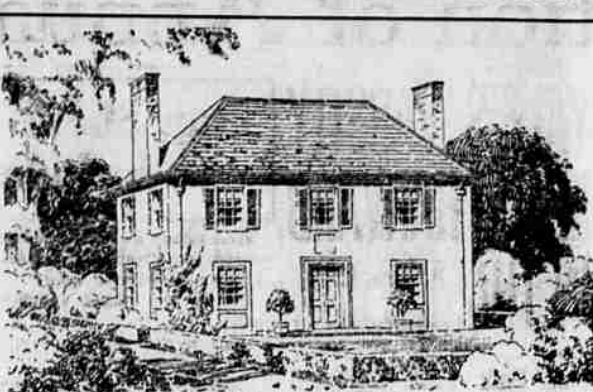

"Is that you, darling? So glad you called up. Tony's soft lazy voice broke into her fears. His tone was reassuring.

"How did you know it was I?" she faltered.

She heard him laugh. "I didn't call every girl darling. It's always safe until I know who she is. But I know who you are, Mary Lou. Well, how are you today, my puritan maid?"

Mary Lou said she was very well.

Chance to Watch Your Garden Grow

Both living room and dining room face a garden in this plan of a six-room Georgian type home. The terrace, with openings from both rooms also, should be covered with a brightly colored awning.

An inside lot is the preferred location for this plan but it is also suitable for a corner site.

The owner's bed room, in this luxurious home, is equipped with a private bath room and the other two bed rooms are conveniently located in relation to the second bath.

ASHLAND CHERRY CROP TO RETURN EXCELLENT PRICE

ASHLAND, Ore., June 21.—(Special.) The cherry crop of Ashland and vicinity is up to the average of past years and will result in an estimated harvest from 60 to 75 tons. A San Francisco grower in Ashland today indicated that the California cherries are being sold at cheaper prices due to quality and said the local fruit should bring at least 15 cents per pound on the market in his state.

BOOTH HOLDERS DEPLORE ENDING OF CITY MARKET

While patronage was as heavy as usual, there was a depressed feeling about the city public market this forenoon, booth holders were deploring the action of the city discontinuing the market after July 1.

A woman, who has been bringing produce to the market ever since it was established, in the neighborhood of 20 years ago was especially indignant and could not see why the action was taken. She declared the farmer, as a whole, were disappointed in the discontinuance of the market where they were blessed with some feeling of independence in selling their own produce.

There are rumors that petitions are to be circulated in a short time in an effort to keep the market open, especially during the summer months when produce is coming in heavy.

In addition to a flourishing retail trade, Marketmaster F. M. Corlies said today that large quantities of produce have been disposed of at wholesale prices to Klamath and California buyers. The market is open daily and in addition to produce, has a meat
