BAD DAY FOR DAD IN RADIO PLAYLET

To tag along and keep the kids off of every lawn they came to seemed to be one of the smallest duties connected with keeping peace in the neighborhood. Dick Brown, father of Polly and Peter, found this out when taking over the management of the children for one day, in the Nell von der Hellen play, "Too Close for Comfort," which was presented over KMEM, the Mail Tribune-Virgin radio station.

Mr. Brown thought he could work on his books while giving his wife a day of rest from the neighbors, but discovered that instead of making out collection slips, he had to pay the neighbors for everything from doctor's bills to giving an Italian $5 for a ruined plant.
