A COUPLE OF STARS IN STRIPES—Lest you forget what important day falls on July 4, these fair patriots of the movies, in the guise of Uncle Sam, are here to remind you. Of course, that's a nifty salute Dorothy Mackaill, left, is giving, but chances are you'd snap to attention at the smile anyway. And while you may think that charming Alice White, right, is in 'Wonderland' standing so perilously close to cans of powder, actually she is ready to shoot the works.

A FELLOW WHO has his ups and downs is William Koblick, above, pole vaulter of the crack University of California track squad. He is shown here as he cleared the bar in a practice leap at the Harvard Stadium, Cambridge, Mass., where he competed in the Intercollegiate for the first time.

NO LOAFING ON THIS CORNER—Not, at least, for these speedy steeds who are shown here in a striking action photo rounding a turn in an exciting race at the Brookline Country Club at Brookline, Mass. Alchemist, whose dust the others are watching, finished first.

THE OVERHEAD MAY BE TERRIFIC, but what's a couple of big guns when you're watching an important naval ceremony? These tars, members of the crew of the U. S. S. Wyoming, are shown assembled on the quarterdeck at Brooklyn Navy Yard as Vice Admiral Arthur L. Willard took command of the U. S. Naval Scouting fleet, succeeding Vice Admiral William C. Cole.

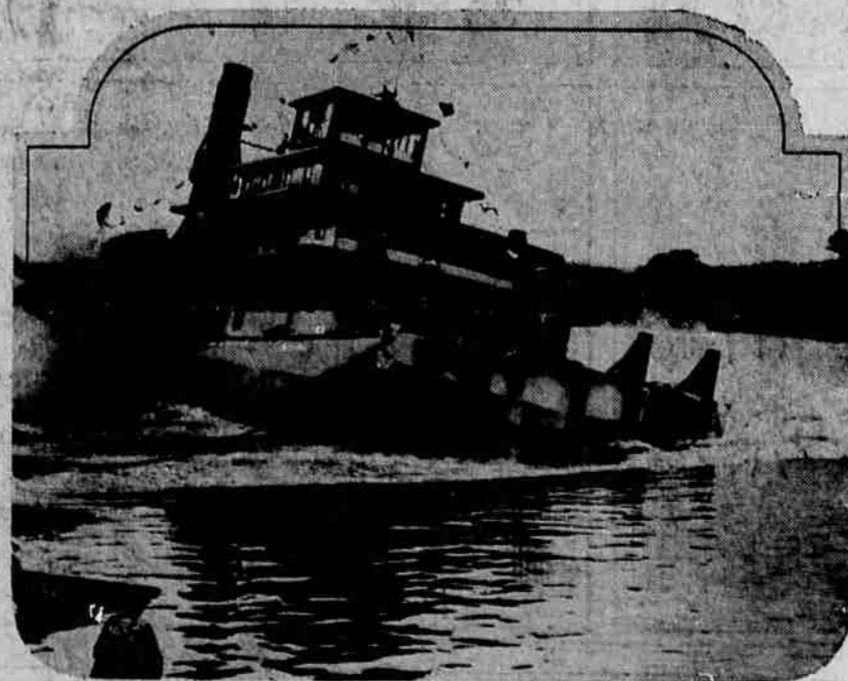

AS A MOTHER GUARDS its young, rugged Grinnell Peak in Glacier National Park, Mont., stands like a sentinel over quiet Bull Lake, which it has produced by its melting snows. This photo may explain why Glacier Park boasts that its ranges surpass the Alps in ruggedness and grandeur.

RESPLENDENT in this charming satin gown, Mrs. George H. Phelps of Detroit is shown here as she appeared when presented before the King and Queen of Great Britain at the Court of St. James. The train of the gown is embroidered with silver and the headress caught with a simple bandeau of diamonds.

AS GUESTS ARRIVED FOR THE BIG PARTY—Looking for a place to park are these army, navy and civilian airplanes as they arrived at Los Angeles to participate in the dedication of the new Municipal Airport. City and state officials, as well as notables in the field of aviation, attended the ceremonies.

THERE WAS A RUSH TO THE BANKS of the Kanawha River at Charleston, W. Va., the other day to see this queer craft, the first Turbo-Electric river towboat, slide in the water for the first time. Christened the "Indiana," this tow, propelled by a combination of steam and electricity, is said to represent the greatest advance in river propulsion since Robert Fulton adapted steam to ships.

FLOWERY LANGUAGE is perhaps what you'd use in describing this pose of Denise Sawyer, who is shown here nestled among some prize flowers at the annual California Gladiolus Show held recently at Los Angeles. And Denise seems happy to be in with such a bunch.

PLENTY OF HORSE PLAY is in store for Europeans who happen to see Captain Tom Hickman, above, of Texas Rangers, do his rope and rough-riding stunts this summer. The captain is a featured performer with the Texas Cowboy Band which plans a series of concerts throughout the continent.
