A NICE GIRL COMES TO TOWN

By Mayla Greig

SYNOPSIS: Brynmor plans to marry Clarice Day, a dancer, despite his wealthy father's objections. Freddy Mason, who Brynmor hates, accuses Clarice that she will reveal her past to Brynmor if she insists on marrying him. In an attempt to get Mason out of the way, Clarice asks police on his trail. The night before the proposed marriage, Brynmor calls his former sweetheart, Mary Lou Lewis, her new fiance, Tony Whitmore, offers sympathy. Brynmor tries to get rid of Clarice's father while she is in town.

Chapter 23 DISGRACE

THE last person Brynmor had wanted to see was Freddy Mason. Surely the fellow had sense enough to know that. Yet what could he do about it under the circumstances?

Clarice herself answered the ring. They heard the click-click of the wooden heels of her mules going louder as she ran down the corridor. She saw Brynmor first.

"Oh, Bryn, darling—" she began. Then she caught sight of Freddy Mason, and the color instantly fled from her cheeks. For a moment Brynmor thought she was going to faint.

"W-w-why, I don't—" "Of course it's a surprise to see me," Mason interposed grimly. He stepped forward through the doorway.

Clarice clung limply against the door, apparently unable to speak or move. Brynmor somehow felt sorry for her. Why should Mason have taken it into his head to intrude in this way? He sensed something queer in the air. Her curiosity triumphed over his shrew to keep quiet.

"What's the meaning of all this?" he demanded. Mason continued to walk down the corridor toward Clarice's room. "Come along, Whitmore," he flung over his shoulder. "You're going to hear a certain little story that may amuse you, and again it may not."

Terrified, Clarice flung her arms around Brynmor. "Don't listen to him, Bryn, darling," she begged hysterically. "Go away, please. Come back later—before he could reply, Mason intervened.

"It's no use, Clarie. He's going to hear it now, straight from the shoulder. If he still wants to marry you afterward, that's his affair. "Come along," he added, since neither Brynmor nor Clarice moved. "Let's make ourselves comfortable. This may be a long sitting, you know."

Clarice, her head bowed as if in shame, followed the two men into the living room. Brynmor, awaiting developments, said nothing. Freddy still smiled with that malicious grin.

Presently he cleared his throat. "Well, shall I begin?" "No, I'll tell him myself," she said decisively. "After all, this is my story."

Her small body, under the flowing red dress, was rigid, and her white ringed hands were clenched at her sides. "I'm going to tell you everything, Bryn. I'm not afraid." She threw a contemptuous glance in Mason's direction, but he continued to maintain an air of indifference.

"I'm going to tell you the whole story of my life, right from the beginning..." Brynmor leaned forward. He said nothing, but his head was awash with questions. What was the cause of all this? Clarice hadn't intimated that there was any reason for such a revelation, and he hadn't pressed her for facts about her past.

"I never had any parents to speak of," she resumed. "I was brought up in the slums—a gutter kid. But I had big ideas in my head, and I wanted to do things, become a great dancer. I had lots of talent, but no money and no training. And I needed training to get out of the rut."

"When I was 15 I got a dancing job in a cheap cabaret in the East End. That's where I met Freddy. He took an interest in me, offered me money for lessons and nice clothes. Well, I took the money. What else could I do? It was that or nothing."

"In return, I've been helping him from time to time." It seemed difficult for her to continue, but she did so resolutely. "Yes, you may as well know it. Freddy's a crook. High class jobs, night clubs and the like, are his specialty."

Her voice broke off suddenly. The horror in Brynmor's eyes seemed to deprive her of speech. Yet she couldn't see anything very dreadful in what she'd told him already. The worst part was to some... that telephone call last night.

As for the rest, she couldn't see that cranks were much different and Bon Nell Jones called on Mrs. Schneur Sunday.

PHOENIX BOY SCOUTS WIN ROSEBURG HONOR

PHOENIX, July 10.—(Special) Some time ago the local Boy Scout troop won first place in a first aid contest for Jackson county, entitling them to compete for southern Oregon championship at a similar contest in Roseburg last Saturday against the Roseburg council, consisting of Josephine, Douglas and Coos counties. Phoenix won over them for the southern Oregon championship.

The patrol winning this honor included Edwin White, Tim White, Eugene Scherrer, George Stevens and Albert Ross.

They were accompanied to Roseburg by their scout master, Dr. Dan E. Standard. They returned here Monday morning.
