

COHEN AND KELLY BEAT SCOTCHMAN IN BUSINESS DEAL

There is a pleasing weather entertainment, which opened at the Fox Criterion theatre last night to run until Sunday, for it is a double-barrelled laugh show consisting of a short talking comedy by those inimitable funsters, Oliver Hardy and Stan Laurel, depicting among other things their being plucked at a night club, which rocks the house with merriment, followed by the feature picture, "The Cohens and Kellys in Scotland," in which that other pair of favorite dialect comedians, Charles Murray and George Sidney, bring much laughter with their petty jealousies, antics and sayings. The only other thing in the whole entertainment program is the Fox Movietone News.

The feature picture is out and out slapstick comedy and very much "lowbrow," but as you give way to laughter and giggles you would not have it otherwise. It requires no thought whatever and is packed with merriment for theatre goers who like that kind of entertainment.

Adding Charlie Murray as Kelly, and the round titled George Sidney of the Hebraic dialect as Cohen, in their entertainment efforts, is the buxom Kate Price as Kelly's wife and Vera Gordon as Mrs. Cohen.

The explanation of the presence in Scotland of Cohen and Kelly, former business partners in the United States, is explained by the desire of each, unknown to the other, to corner the ladies' cloth market. The fun begins from the time they arrive in Edinburgh to make purchases and unexpectedly run into each other and continues through a series of mixups until the finale, where they are reunited partners leaving for home, having by their united clever business ability done two Scotch business men out of half a million dollars. You can see how absurdly absurd that fact would be.

Especially ridiculous humor are the golf games in which Cohen and Kelly take part, and a race horse sequence, and then again where each tries to commit suicide when facing seeming bankruptcy. The suicide attempt also sets them into Turkish towel garb and more comedy situations, with their wives going into a seance, and the surprising reappearance of the husbands throwing the women into hysterics.

Why Fat Men Stay Fat

"The trouble with me, and I guess it applies to 99% of the men who are putting on weight, I didn't have the energy or pep" to keep it off. Lost all interest in any healthy activity and just lazed around accumulating the old pounds until I got that "Kruschen feeling."

Start taking Kruschen's Salt— that's the common-sense way to reduce—but don't take them with the idea that they possess reducing qualities in themselves. This is what they do—they clean out the impurities in your blood by keeping the bowels, kidneys and liver in splendid working shape and fill you with vigor and new energy you'd almost forgotten had existed.

As a result instead of planting yourself in an easy chair every free moment and letting fatty fat accumulate you feel an urge for around doing the things you've always wanted to do and need to do to keep you in good condition.

Then watch the pounds slide off! Kruschen's Salt are the wonderful Fountain of Youth. Take one-half teaspoonful in a glass of hot or cold water tomorrow morning and every morning—and if they don't change your whole idea about reducing, go back and get the small price you paid for them. Get an extra 4 weeks' worth of Kruschen's Salt—a week's worth of Kruschen's Salt—any progressive druggist anywhere in the world.

A NICE GIRL COMES TO TOWN

By Hazel Greig

SYNOPSIS: Rather than continue a make-believe engagement with Tony, Mary Lou breaks it. He has told her that he intends to marry her. Then Brynner, her former sweetheart whom she once loved, comes to her to marry her. It seems like a "romantic" solution, and she accepts his proposal. Tony's wealthy aunt, who is fond of Mary Lou, sets out his allowance when she learns their engagement. Tony goes to the gun shop of Mary Lou's cousin, where she works, to apologize for his discourtesy of the night before. Outside he sees a "Toy Wanted" sign, and he enters with it as the playful pretext of looking for a job.

Chapter 29 EXITS FOR TONY

JAY stared at him coldly and disdainfully as he entered the shop.

"Is there anything we can do for you today, Mr. Titherington? May I interest you in a new selection of gowns we just received from Paris?"

Tony looked at her and smiled half shamefully.

"You are raking me over the coals, aren't you? May I see Mary Lou?"

Jay's dark almond-shaped eyes brightened.

"Mary Lou is up in the alterations room. Do you know your way?"

Tony thanked her and ran up the stairs.

He was greeted by a quiet Mary Lou, cool and self-possessed. To his embarrassment he found himself stammering over his apology like a schoolboy.

"Tell me," he broke off in the middle of it, "what was the matter with you last night, Mary Lou?"

"Nothing at all," she said quickly. "I didn't feel very well, so I thought it was best to go home."

"But you're better now?" She nodded her neatly shingled head.

"Yes, I'm much better today, thanks."

He paused, wondering what else he could say to give him an excuse for staying. For some inexplicable reason he wanted to talk with her.

"Look here, Mary Lou," he began, but she interrupted.

"I'm afraid I haven't any time to talk with you now, Tony. And you really must go, for we're usually busy today. You have no business here in the shop during working hours, you know."

This time Tony was prepared for her outspoken suggestion that he leave.

Triumphantly he produced from his pocket the neatly printed card he had found outside the shop—"Smart Delivery Boy Wanted."

"I'm here on business," he pointed out seriously, holding the card before her.

"Aunt Ethelberta has cut me off, and I suspect that you know the reason for it. This time it's definite, and I have no hopes of getting another penny from her. Therefore I've got to have a job. What about this errand-boy proposition?"

He grinned, expecting Mary Lou to laugh at him. Instead she looked at him with serious, quizzical eyes.

"Very well," she said calmly. "I'll take upon myself the responsibility of engaging you. Your salary will be 15 shillings a week, and you'll begin work this minute. And your first job today will be to deliver this gown to Miss Gwendolyn Carruthers. I believe you know her address. Be sure that you apologize for the unfortunate mistake that was made last night."

Her sudden outburst robbed Tony of his usual ready wit. While he was groping vainly for some clever remark to offer in reply, she thrust a cardboard box into his arms and shut the door in his face.

The wind had been taken completely out of Tony's sails, and he looked in amazement at the gaily decorated box under his arm. Then he chuckled.

"Well, that's score one for Mary Lou," he muttered. "But why not play up to this game? It may turn out to be amusing yet."

He saw the box under his arm, and he slipped out to the street by a side door to avoid another encounter with Jay.

The weather had changed since he had entered the store. The skies had clouded, and raindrops splashed down on the scurrying pedestrians.

Tony turned up his coat collar, spotted the bus he wanted, and ran for it. As he crossed the street, the box slipped from under his arm, and the wind sent it scurrying into the gutter.

He dashed for it, but a horse's hoof beat him to it. Undaunted, the horse galloped on, the box surrounding its leg like a circus trap—and the dress trailed behind in the mud.

Tony shouted hoarsely to the driver, but to no avail. He retrieved the dress with difficulty, wrapped it hastily in a newspaper, and rushed back to the bus.

When he reached the Carruthers home in Mayfair a short while later, with Mrs. Welch was Miss Bess Ogie, former resident of Jacksonville.

Friends of Mrs. T. C. Norris will be glad to know she will soon be home from the Sacred Heart hospital, where she has been a patient for some time.
