

NEW EAGLE POINT PAPER HAS BOOST FOR DAIRY FARMS

The first issue of the Rogue River Valley Herald, a monthly publication, edited and published by Buford A. Clark of the Herald Publishing company, Eagle Point, came off the press yesterday, and 1500 copies will be distributed to interested people throughout the country. The first issue of the 12-page magazine is devoted to the Eagle Point Irrigation district.

The Herald is published "with the definite aim of reaching those interested in the many opportunities offered here, and telling them of our interests and activities." The local Chamber of Commerce, the Eagle Point Irrigation district and the Realty Board are aiding in the distribution. Subscription are also being taken.

A double page is devoted to the growth of Medford, dairying and stock raising. Several photo-engravings appear on the page, which were used through the courtesy of the California Oregon Power company. Acknowledgement is also made to the Mail Tribune for articles and information gained from the newspaper.

One page of the issue is devoted to the 1920 output of pears in the valley, giving the 1919 receipts, the market plans used, and different activities that are being sponsored for the distribution of the fruit.

The second number which will be off the press in August, will feature Crater Lake as the center of scenic attractions. Mr. Clark plans to tell of some industry, attraction and benefits of the Rogue River valley in each month's issue. Mr. and Mrs. Clark recently came to Eagle Point from Bellingham, Wash.

Campfire Of Stone Age Hunters Shows They Once Roamed Nevada

LAS VEGAS, Nev.—(AP) A campfire whose ashes have been cold for 20,000 years has proved to archaeologists that man roamed North America along with the mastodon and giant sloth.

In the recesses of Gypsum cave in the Sunset mountains of southern Nevada, where prospectors looked in vain for gold, Dr. Mark Harrington found what he considers unmistakable evidence of man's presence in the remote Pleistocene age.

While searching the cave Dr. Harrington found remains left by some great herbivorous animal, which he believed to have been the giant ground sloth, extinct mammal of 20,000 years ago. His belief was confirmed by Barnum Brown, New York anthropologist, who was familiar with ground sloth remains found in South America.

Then the upper half of an animal's skull was pulled from between the broken rocks of the cave floor. It was identified as that of a ground sloth.

Further excavation uncovered numerous bones of the ground sloth, the tiny skeleton of a prehistoric horse, and scores of broken dart shafts and points of obsidian and flint, parts of the weapons used by the primitive men of the time.

Brushing away the dust of centuries the excavators dug down through seven feet of hard gypsum stalagmites and broken rock layers. Here they found another layer of remains left by the sloth.

Beneath this lay the campfire itself, a mound of ashes, charcoal and burnt sticks, just as it had been left by the inhabitants of the cave 20,000 years ago. Proof of the campfire's age lay in the fact that the layers of rock and debris above it must have taken at least that length of time to accumulate and were entirely undisturbed. The remains of the campfire, over which prehistoric hunters once may have roasted the meat of the giant sloth itself, will be left undisturbed in the cavern by Dr. Harrington as an exhibit. "We hope," he explained, "that scientists will take advantage of the invitation to view what is perhaps unique in the history of American archaeology."

Wall Street Report

NEW YORK, July 18.—(AP)—The bull movement in share prices showed decided signs of weariness during most of today's trading, but bears who tried for a technical reaction fell into a trap and were driven to cover as shares moved abruptly higher in the last hour.

A wide assortment of important shares closed 2 to 8 points higher, while Case shot up 17.

U. S. Steel, Republic Steel, Columbia, Graphophone, Radio and Westinghouse Electric were up 2 to 3, and Coca Cola more than 1. The close was strong. Sales approximated 2,800,000 shares.
