

EVANGELISTS TO OPEN SERVICE IN ASHLAND SUNDAY

Rev. and Mrs. Watson Argue, young evangelists, who have many friends in Medford, are beginning evangelistic services Sunday in Ashland.

Rev. Watson Argue.

Their campaign will be conducted in a tent accommodating 1000 pitched on the Junior High school grounds. Rev. Argue will speak Sunday night at eight o'clock on "God's Great Invitations." The services will continue every night for a month. Preceding each sermon, Rev. Argue leads a song service with a slide trombone and is assisted at the piano by Mrs. Argue. The young evangelist is known as "the swimming parson," having won a collection of 40 awards in aquatic meets. In 1923, Rev. Argue conducted an evangelistic campaign in the Medford Armory.

VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA GIVE UP LOCAL PLAN

Plans for opening a social welfare home in this city have been temporarily abandoned by the local chapter of the Volunteers of America, Co. Jessie E. Starks, who is in Medford from Portland, announced today, following a thorough survey of the city and conference with the local budget committee of the community chest. The organization will continue the work started in Medford, however, by maintaining the headquarters at 128 East Main street, the mission, relief department and a local office. Cases will be taken to the home in Portland for care, with the exception of emergency cases, which will be handled at local headquarters.

This change in program plans, Col. Starks stated today, has been necessitated by the general business depression which is felt throughout the nation. The organization feels that it would be impossible to raise funds to finance the home here at the present time. The volunteers will carry on extensive charity work here at Christmas time and will care for homeless children through the Portland office. All cases will be reported to the office at local headquarters, who will in turn report them to Portland. The local chapter plans to cooperate with all existing clubs and charitable organizations in avoiding duplication of work. Col. Starks pointed out. Speaking for the organization, she expressed appreciation of the support so far given the workers and the general attitude of the Medford people extended toward the projects undertaken here. The local officer will collect clothing for distribution to families who are in need, and all cases should be reported to her.

D. A. R. SCHOOL OF CITIZENSHIP WILL REOPEN AUG. 9TH

The Daughters of the American Revolution announce the opening of the summer classes to aid foreigners seeking citizenship. These classes will be held at the public library, Medford, beginning Saturday, August 9, at 7:30 p.m. All who have made their first declaration and expect to apply for final or second papers before 1931, should attend these classes. A representative from the district office in Portland will make a visit here about three months after the September court. At that time he will give a preliminary examination to each petitioner and a knowledge of our government will materially aid him in his final test. The late congress has passed a simplified law to restore citizenship to women who have married foreigners, previous to 1922. All wishing to have the citizenship status restored should avail themselves of this class and refresh their memory on the facts of our government as a knowledge of the history and government is required. For further information, phone 67.

Most foreign nations think Congress saw its duties and rather overhauled them.—Florence (Ala.) Herald.

HIGH SCHOOL TO HAVE LIBRARY ON A NEW SYSTEM

To facilitate the handling of used books, sold at the senior high school, in the book exchange, this office is being moved into the school library, where it will be in charge of Miss Myrna Barrett, high school librarian. A Dutch window is being cut in the wall, so that books may be checked out without the students coming into the library.

The school library is made up of 4228 books, 999 of which are supplementary books, being used in connection with the different courses taught. These are checked out to the teacher of the course, who in turn checks them out to the students.

Approximately 200 new books are added to the library annually, being purchased largely for the department of interest to the public. Names of 60 magazines are included on the subscription list of the library, with duplications of some magazines for supplementary reading in the history department.

In a record kept over 163 days, 52,563 students checked into the library during school hours, with 24,568 books in circulation during the nine months of school. This tabulation of books checked out does not include the supplementary texts.

Miss Barrett, who has been in charge of the library for the past four years, is now enrolled at the University of California at Berkeley, where she is studying library work. She will return in about two weeks to check in new books at the library, and those which have been repaired during the summer months.

A course in library instruction was given last year by Miss Barrett, with the students enrolled conducting the library during their class periods.

John Condon of the Condon Advertising Agency of Tacoma, Wash., was in Medford today arranging for the meeting of the Pacific Coast Advertising association in Medford, September 18 to 21.

There will be about 80 representatives of advertising agencies, magazines and newspaper representatives from San Diego to Seattle in attendance.

During the meeting a banquet will be served and the party will be taken to Crater Lake by the Chamber of Commerce.

DAGGER by Mary Dahlberg

SYNOPSIS: Drawn from Mexican manuscripts by Eugene-Old Dagger Marley, niece of a Texas ranchman, Keweenaw, American adventurer, saves the love of her father and the life of her uncle, Jim Marley and Dick Widdie, an Englishman who has come to the ranch to forget some past wrong. However, who has a wife he does not love, resists the temptation to return Dagger's affection and leaves to join the Allied armies in France. Widdie joins a British commission buying food for the army. Keweenaw, American, enters the war. Howard is reported missing and probably dead. Dagger, meanwhile, goes to visit an aunt in San Antonio. There she meets Captain John Widdie, father of the man who shares unusual interest in her and offers to help her learn to fly.

Chapter 10 VANEERING FALLS IN LOVE

VANEERING changed from his flying suit into uniform, and climbed into the car beside Dagger.

"There's a roadhouse a bit on where we can get breakfast," he said. "And farther out is Eddy Stedman's field."

"What's that?" she asked. "A private flying-field. Eddy's a good egg, friend of mine. He trains the overflow of candidates for the Government, and a bunch of Cubans and Canadians, into the bargain. You see, Dagger, it would be impossible to send you up in an Army ship, but Eddy could take you, and no questions asked."

"I hesitated. "It's more or less up to you, I mean. If he thinks you're safe to teach, he'll do it for me, although very few women have learned to fly as yet."

"I don't know why not," Dagger asserted cockily. "I guess women can do anything men can."

"I'm betting you can," Vaneering replied, with an open look of admiration. His hand strayed as by accident over hers, where it rested on the steering wheel. "You're a very wonderful girl, Dagger."

"And I don't hold hands," she snapped. "Quite right, he answered cordially. "Too early for that sort of thing."

They had a friendly breakfast together and afterwards drove up the road to a much smaller flying field than Kelly's.

A young man came forward at sight of Vaneering, glancing curiously at Dagger.

"This is Eddy Stedman," Vaneering introduced him. "My friend, Miss Marley, Eddy. She wants to fly."

"Yes?" he drawled. "I've done a heap of things in this game, but I don't ordinarily contract to teach women, Miss Marley."

"I'm sure I could learn," Dagger answered, hating herself for the allied eagerness she was unable to avoid.

"I'd take it as a particular favor, Eddy," put in Vaneering. "Miss Marley has the stuff in her, I believe. If she can make good, she might be useful for exhibition flying."

"She might," conceded Eddy. "But she has a family, eh?"

"Not to interfere," Dagger said hastily. "And I'd love to do exhibition flying."

Stedman surveyed her for some moments without answering. "You'd have to do exactly what you were told," he warned. "I would."

"And if I wasn't satisfied with you, I'd drop the whole business." "But you won't have to, Mr. Stedman."

"Won't it?" He exchanged grins with Vaneering. "I expect not, but still—When can you begin?"

"Right now," she said. "Hold on," he exclaimed. "All my buses are in the air, and I've got them filled for the rest of the morning. Come tomorrow about this time, and we'll see what we can do. Or better say six o'clock. I'm sorry to seem ungalant, Miss Marley; but this must be a case of ladies first for men's convenience. I blame it on the war."

"I won't blame it on anybody," she retorted gayly. "Thanks awfully, Mr. Stedman."

"Wait and see how you feel five hundred feet up," he advised. Dagger felt perfectly comfortable five hundred feet up. The only person who minded was Aunt Espy.

"I can't tell of such nonsense," affirmed the positive old lady. "No, you needn't say another word, Alk. I don't mind your having a good time, and being up until all hours, but there's a limit to all things, and—"

"You let Willie fly," interjected Dagger.

"I did not. He scamped me." "Well, I'm not going to scamp you, Aunt Espy. I'm going to convince you."

"Convince me!" scoffed Aunt Espy. "I'd like to hear you." "All right. Is there any reason why a woman can't learn to fly as
