"EVERYONE IN SOUTHERN OREGON READS THE MEDFORD MAIL TRIBUNE"

Colored Star in Rialto Fight Film

Stepin Fetchit, dusky actor who appears prominently cast in the comedy role of "Spot" in James Cruze's sensational talkie, "The Big Fight," at the Fox Rialto theater today and Saturday, is a welcome figure in movie studios for two reasons. The first is that he's an exceptionally capable actor, and can always be relied upon to make the most of any part he plays, extracting every ounce of comedy from his role. Second is that he's an unfailing source of fun for the director and the company — so much so that James Cruze would often have Stepin go through a scene simply because the producer enjoyed watching him do it. At times, though, Stepin's laugh-making ability is almost perilous—for silence must be preserved while a scene is being shot, and when the colored actor delivers his comedy lines in a lazy, slow drawl, it's often pretty much of a job to restrain loud guffaws.

Stepin's comedy relieves a highly exciting and dramatic story of the prize ring and underworld, for "The Big Fight" is a tense spectacular account of a racketeer's attempt to have a championship battle "thrown." In the splendid cast assembled by Cruze are Lola Lane, "Big Boy Guinn Williams, Ralph Ince and Wheeler Oakman. The talkie is based on the stage play presented by David Belasco, in which Jack Dempsey starred.
