D. M. Lowe Returns From Omaha and Phoenix With Trophies—Parsons Stock Also Won.

D. M. Lowe, exhibitor for the Northern California-Southern Oregon Development association, has recently returned from Omaha, Nebraska, and reports that the exhibit of the development association captured a large number of honors, both at the Arizona State Fair at Phoenix and the Middle States Exposition and Livestock Show at Omaha.

In addition to the regular exhibit, which the association has been displaying at various fairs, it was fortunate in having Reginald Parsons of Mount Crest Stock farm near Hill, Calif., join with it in exhibiting pure bred cattle. These took 16 first prizes second, two thirds and two grand champions.

The hardwoods and carved woods in the displays at Phoenix and Omaha drew particular attention, both from the judges and those visiting the fairs and also was this the case at the Pacific International Livestock Exposition at Portland.

Peas Wins Prize

At Omaha the association won first on hardwoods, first on carvings, first on carved woods, second on five box lots of fruits, and two sweepstakes on Klamath potatoes; and at Phoenix, Arizona, 18 firsts (on woods alone) and two sweepstakes.

It was estimated by Mr. Lowe that 4000 people per hour passed the exhibit at Omaha during the three days of the fair.

Earlier in the season the association won a beautiful trophy at the California State Fair at Sacramento and received favorable mention for its display at Salem and the Pacific International Livestock Exposition at Portland.

SEAL SALE DATA IN SCHOOL TALKS

Information concerning the history of the Tuberculosis Christmas seal sale is being compiled by Mrs. Margaret Schuler for the public speaking class at the senior high school. Members of this class, under the supervision of Ralph R. Bailey, will make speeches concerning the seals.

OFFICER CHECKING ON BEEF TAG USE

Joseph Kimsley has arrived from the state veterinary office at Salem to cooperate with the sheriff's office in checking up on beef slaughtering activities in this section. He has already one or two cases to come up in justice court in Ashland in connection with ranchers disposing of beef without being properly tagged, in keeping with a legislative enactment.

Moochers Story Points Warning for Youths to Avoid Transgressions

(By Ernest Rostel.)
"Mister, could you spare a fellow a dime or two?" asked the youth. "I've tramped from up north to-day and my pockets are empty."

He had stopped a Medford resident at the public drinking fountain near the Chamber of Commerce, and the young beggar's eyes betrayed hunger and weariness to the listener.

"Come, we'll feed you and you'll remember that you did not go hungry in Medford."

Seated in the warmth of a restaurant, the youth had a story to tell of blasted hopes, of kin who had forgotten him, and of a place where he had spent two long years, an outcast of society. A week or two ago, the youth, who gave his name as William Delaney, had a number and a cell in the Washington state reformatory at Monroe, serving time for attempting to crowd too much enjoyment into one evening.

With a friend, he had rented a car from a local agency, become intoxicated and finally succeeded in smashing the car and sending his friend to the hospital. He had kept the machine out too long and in all sufficient events had occurred to send him to Monroe.

"I had a good job, friends, and all that makes life enjoyable," he related, "but things came easy and I wanted more than my share of excitement. I took a drink, another followed, and then some more. I wanted to see if I could drive the machine when I was drunk. It landed me in the penitentiary and I lost everything."

"I became sick of the tiny cell where they played me, loved of the guards always around me, and made no friends in the several hundred blighted souls who called the place home—sorry for life, I became sorry for myself. Each evening we were locked in at 7 and each morning at 6 we arose. For weeks I could not sleep. I pounded the pillow, kicked the cell walls and wished that I were the lowliest beggar rather than stay in the place."

"I did not write to my dear old dad," he continued, "I did not want him to know where I was. He wanted me to go to college instead of quitting school when I did, and wanted me to stay with him in New York to enter his business instead of striking out west."

"Day after day, I marked the calendar that another day had brought me closer to freedom. My spirit was not in the prison walls—it was home with the folks, and that's where I'm heading now, hoping to get there before the Christmas snows. Some of the prisoners tried to get me to break rules because they had already broken them, and so spot my chances for a parole. Others were planning how they would do their next 'spoil' better when they got out so they would not be caught," he continued.

Through it all, Delaney—just 22 years old—kept his head and came before the parole board a month or so ago. His sentence was not yet done, but the two years he had spent were not marred by infractions of rules and he was paroled.

He took the parole papers from his pocket and explained that each month he was to send one back to the prison, giving a complete report of his activities.

"Believe me," he said, "I ain't want to go back to that cell and prison routine. If I had to die, I know how to appreciate liberty and hope that other young fellows will think twice before doing some deed that will take them away from their fellow men. When they let me out, they gave me a new suit of clothes and, most of all, freedom. I'm starting in all over and shall always tread the straight and narrow."

Delaney's story was over. He reached for the cap given him at the prison, gave thanks for the meal and went out in the cool air of the November evening. Today he is somewhere on the Pacific highway, hiking south and then a little later set to find folk whom he plans to tell that he had been absent on a boat voyage that took him to the far corners of the earth. They'll never know he was a prisoner out west, if his secret is not betrayed.

SCOUT LEADERS PLAN VISITS TO COUNCIL TROOPS

A schedule has been completed at scout headquarters for the scout commissioners, who will visit troops in Crater Lake council during the next two weeks.

The troops are being graded on appearance, 10 points; D.P. records, 10; troop equipment, 10; weekly reports, 10; patrol activities, 20; advancements, 20; and hikes, 20. If a sufficient amount of community service has been done by the troop, 10 points are credited.
