WING APPLES CAPTURE PRIZE AT PORTLAND

Southern Oregon apples secure again, proving that superior pears are not the only prize winning fruit raised in the Rogue River valley. Honors this time go to the Newtown apples grown on the Wing orchard near Medford. First prize at the Pacific International Exposition in Portland, at which exhibits were entered from Hood River, Wamath and all leading apple belts of the Pacific coast, was awarded the Newtown apples, entered by Chas. A. Wing in an exhibit prepared by D. M. Lodge. The same apples were then taken to the Western States exposition at Phoenix, Ariz., where they again received the blue ribbon as winners of first prize, it was learned here today. Fruits were entered at the latter exposition by all the western states. These apples, which are considered one of the finest crops ever grown in the Rogue River valley, were on display earlier in the season at the Chamber of Commerce building and the Bootery shoe store. Harry Young, superintendent of the Pinnacle Packing house, who has been in the fruit packing business for 15 years, described the southern Oregon Newtowns as superior to any he has handled. The remarkable feature of the fruit is that it is not only large but free from worms and scale and packed out only six percent culls. The pack-out per box was 82 percent. From 14,000 boxes, 14,000 packed out extra fancy with less than 2,000 fancies. Most of the apples have been sold to countries of Europe and Egypt. Mr. Wing stated this morning.

NEW STRAWBERRY INTERESTS VALLEY

The strawberry growers of Medford and other parts of Jackson county as well as local horticulturists generally are much interested in the news emanating from the Oregon State college last week of a new variety of strawberry which is said to be a cross between the well known Marshall variety and the Ellettsburg No. 12. It is stated that, convinced that the discovery is destined to become a valuable new strawberry variety, the Oregon experiment station has applied for a public service patent on the find, which has been named the Corvallis strawberry, and which was hybrid developed from seed.

FORMER MEDFORD FAMILY TAKE TO AVIATION FIELD

Up at Seattle recently Vern C. Gorst, pioneer in the Oregon and Pacific coast flying transport business, took a flying examination, as a result of which he has been granted a department of commerce transport license. At the same time his son Wilbur, 21, won his private pilot's papers. Now Mr. Gorst's daughter, Myrtis, has also become imbued with the flying urge and has begun taking flying instruction from him, with a view to obtaining official license wings like her father and brother.

Medford and Jackson county takes an unusual interest in Mr. Gorst, as years ago he operated a taxi service between Medford and Jacksonville. He began flying long ago, first obtaining his private pilot's and limited commercial flying licenses, and he was the original founder of the Pacific Air Transport company which later was acquired by the Boeing system.

Although he makes his home at Portland Mr. Gorst operates the Gorst Air Transport company between Bremerton and Seattle, and he is a director of the Air Ferries, Ltd., operating between San Francisco and other bay cities.
